Here's a fun fact: Did you know that "You need to start taking your meds again" ceased to be clever around 1997?

Dude, with all apologies, since this newsgroup is infested with posts based upon factually incorrect information (and dare I say, outright distortion), it's incumbent that someone who hasn't been snowed by the Drudge Report provide accurate information to rectify it. It's called democracy, checks & balances, it's there in the Bill of Rights and Constitution, expanded upon by great men like Thomas Jefferson. (Perhaps you could look it up.) I have a life, it's the world of reality. Perhaps you prefer the faith-based fantasy world where facts and truth are nasty inconveniences and obstacles for the Bush administration. That's okay, there's room for you too. But lies will be called what they are: lies. Have a nice day!

U.S. gave date of war to Britain in advance, court papers reveal

By Colin Brown, Deputy Political Editor

The Independent UK

27 October 2004

Secret plans for the war in Iraq were passed to British Army chiefs by US defence planners five months before the invasion was launched, a court martial heard yesterday.

The revelation strengthened suspicions that Tony Blair gave his agreement to President George Bush to go to war while the diplomatic efforts to force Saddam Hussein to comply with UN resolutions were continuing.

Alan Simpson, the leader of Labour Against the War, said the documents were "dynamite", if genuine, and showed that Clare Short was right to assert in her book, serialised in The Independent, that Mr Blair had "knowingly misled" Parliament.

The plans were revealed during the court martial of L/Cpl Ian Blaymire, 23, from Leeds, who is charged with the manslaughter of a comrade while serving in Iraq. Sgt John Nightingale, 32, a reservist from Guiseley, West Yorkshire, died after being shot in the chest on 23 September last year.

The court, at Catterick Garrison, North Yorkshire, heard that contingency plans were drawn up by Lt Col Christopher Warren, staff officer at Land Command, Salisbury, Wiltshire, who was responsible for operational training.

Lt Col Warren said US planners had passed on dates for which the invasion was planned. The hearing was told Army chiefs wanted the training for the Army to start at the beginning of December 2002. However, due to "sensitivities" the training was delayed.

The court heard the training for the TA began two months late and for the regular Army one month late. Lt Col Warren was asked what the sensitivities were. He replied: "Because in December there was a world interest. If the UK had mobilised while all this was going on that would have shown an intent before the political process had been allowed to run its course."

The hearing was adjourned.

THAT NBC SCOOP: Before crashing Monday night, I was bombarded with emails informing me that NBC had reported that the explosives at al Qa Qaa were gone before the U.S. troops arrived. But last night, Tom Brokaw reported as follows:

"Last night on this broadcast we reported that the 101st Airborne never found the nearly 380 tons of HMX and RDX explosives. We did not conclude the explosives were missing or had vanished, nor did we say they missed the explosives. We simply reported that the 101st did not find them. For its part, the Bush campaign immediately pointed to our report as conclusive proof that the weapons had been removed before the Americans arrived. That is possible, but that is not what we reported."

Just for the record.

http://www.andrewsullivan.com/index.php?dish_inc=archives/2004_10_24_dish_archive.html#109884823065240776

QUOTE OF THE DAY: "The commander of the first unit into the area told CBS he did not search it for explosives or secure it from looters. 'We were still in a fight,' he said. 'Our focus was killing bad guys.' He added he would have needed four times more troops to search and secure all the ammo dumps he came across." - CBS' latest press release on the missing explosives. Four times more troops. But that would have meant doing it right.

Not enough troops.

Did you read the last two words -- public airwaves? Spectrum was considered a limited resource and government permission was required to use it. In return, conditions were imposed.

There is no apparent shortage of newsprint for purchase.

But that limatation has been relaxed. There have been many new licenses issued since 1980, and there are many more 24 hour stations. Given the open situation, I'm sure there many open radio frequencies in most markets. TV channels haven't been saturated since the introduction of UHF in the early 50s.

Should the fairness doctrine apply in markets in which there are open frequencies and channels?

Why not? Despite their large bandwidth, satellites don't have an unlimited number of frequencies. The FCC currently has jurisdiction over wire communications, but they generally have never enforced program content there. Isn't it unfair that fairness, as defined by the government, isn't enforced there as well?

But why do they listen? Is it because they have single digit IQs? If they are really that stupid, is regulating their radio and TV programming all it takes to make them smarter?

They still sell newspapers. And the internet is a better newssource than radio and TV ever was. If radio and TV disappeared entirely as a news source, people would still have no excuse for being uninformed.

Sure it is.  It's just not the kind of diversity you want.  It isn't what I want, either but I still have alot of good choices.

Stations go on sale from time to time.  They aren't cheap, but that's a reflection of the revenue they can bring in.  And the revenue reflects the number of listeners.

I can buy time right now on brokered stations.  There are several around here, and most of them have open air time.  There are probably similar situations in most markets.

Air America is buying time on at least one Clear Channel station.

The shortwave stations are a good bargain.  Time goes for around a dollar a minute, and most of the country gets covered.

No.  Instead I'll listen to a bunch of bs spewed by people on a NG that keep changing their identity.  Without a doubt THEY are much more credible.

Now run off and join the rest of the flock.

Actually, the point is that you are engaging in rank speculation with no proof, and assuming that it is so because you want it to be so.
That's not a very smart thing to do is it?

BBC exec blasts U.S. war coverage

by Pamela McClintock

Variety.com

Tue Oct 26, 6:22 PM ET

NEW YORK -- BBC World Service and Global News director Richard Sambrook on Tuesday took the U.S. news nets to task on their own turf for "wrapping themselves in the flag" and not asking the tough questions about the Bush administration's reasons for going to war in Iraq.

Sambrook, speaking at Columbia U.'s Graduate School of Journalism, warned that such perceived partisanship of the news media may be playing a part in exposing journalists covering Iraq and other trouble spots around the globe to danger.

"Journalists are now at a greater risk than they have ever been before. Where once their neutrality was widely recognized and respected, today they are targeted and sought out, seen as high-profile representatives of their countries or cultures," Sambrook said.

Sambrook announced the formation of an international committee he will chair to investigate ways to improve safety conditions for reporters on the ground in Iraq and elsewhere. Panel will be administered by the Intl. News Safety Institute, whose membership includes most of the major U.S. TV news nets.

With Iraq considered to be the most dangerous place for journalists in recent memory, all the U.S. network and cable news divisions continue to take unusual steps to protect their personnel in Baghdad, spending hundreds of thousands of dollars on professional security forces, many of them former British commandos.

News nets -- generally unwilling to cooperate with each other -- hold a weekly phone conference call to share security info. They also are considering convening another pool to report on the war-torn city of Fallujah.

According to the Committee to Protect Journalists, 35 journos have been killed since the war began in Iraq, including one American. So far, no high-profile U.S. correspondent has been killed.

Already this year, 22 journalists have been abducted, six of them American.

By all accounts, U.S. TV correspondents in Iraq are severely restricted in their movements because of the danger of attack or kidnapping. Correspondents have again begun embedding with U.S. military forces on particular stories.

"It's extremely dangerous, and the primary frustration is that it's very difficult to report," said ABC News senior VP for news Paul Slavin.

"We are restricted by our own security people or by the U.S. military or by our own good sense," Slavin said. "I really don't want to pull out of Baghdad, but if safety gets to be such an issue, we will do so."

Sambrook is all too aware of the media's coverage of the ramp-up to war -- he was the BBC's director of news at the time of a Beeb report claiming Prime Minister Tony Blair's government had "sexed up" an Iraq intelligence dossier knowing the information was false. That led to the worst crisis in the pubcaster's history.

The report claimed Blair's government had embellished a dossier alleging that Iraq could launch weapons of mass destruction within 45 minutes.

It would be terrific news if they were working on a new antenna for MW DXers. I like my KIWA MW loop very much but have this horrible urge to compare it to a Quantum QX Pro ;-).

Come on now, that's the way things are done in some of the countries we can listen to on the shortwave bands.

Any time you digitally modulate RF it will spread out from the carrier frequency. Now you can use a system like QAM -16 or 64 to minimize this but it still spreads out and occupies more spectrum than the bandwidth allocated. Their are many switching and mixing products that cause digitally modulated RF to spread out above and below the carrier frequency.

From plots I've seen you are at best *(averaged) 60 dBc 30 KHz away from carrier center. This means it will easily wipe out the adjacent channels and weak signals 2 channels away from it.

* Peak is much worse.

For weak signal work that's 40KHz of spectrum with digital buzz for a 9-10 KHz DRM signal and that is when things are working right.

If he identifies it as commentary, I'll agree - but when he presents information with a specific slant to promote his objectives, it shouldn't be called news.

No, no...I lovingly wipe it dry afterwards. Any other behavior would be shocking.

No, he wouldn't. The US invaded as soon as Germany couldn't keep making the interest payments, which it did, until 1942. The New York Bankers wanted to teach them a lesson!

The only TRF radio I ever owned certainly had an oscillator. Matter of fact, it had two, one in the mixer stage and one BFO.

Hilarious!  Now you rightards are doing nuance, doing the "depends on what the meaning of 'is' is" routine.

http://education.yahoo.com/reference/dictionary/entries/52/l0155200.html lie
      NOUN: 1. A false statement deliberately presented as being true; a falsehood.
              2. Something meant to deceive or give a wrong impression.

Bush is clearly guilty of lying.  He and his cohorts altered the CIA report, replacing inconclusive phrases like "might be" with definitive terms like "is."  That clearly was meant to deceive or give a wrong impression (item 2 in the definition).  Bush used the Nigerian white cake story in his state of the union address even after he had been told repeatedly that the story was not true.  That is a false statement deliberately presented as being true (item 1).  Bush is by definition a LIAR! (And those are only two out of hundreds of examples of Bush lying)

Really?  So are people who are DECEIVED by a LIAR (Bush) guilty of lying in your loony world?  I suppose you would like to blame those who were deceived by Bush for Bush's lies and declare Bush innocent of lying.  How convenient.

I gave two examples of Bush lying that are irrefutable.  You gave nothing.

Diebold voting machines president has said repeatedly that he will deliver the votes to the Bush oligarchy.

========================================================

In fact, a massive vote-fraud may likely have been attempted during the 2000 Florida presidential re-count. Diebold insiders have allegedly admitted that a "replacement" set of vote totals was uploaded in Volusia County, Florida, which took 16,022 votes away from Al Gore. The votes were given back to Gore, but only because a Florida clerk noticed the tally going down and sent out an alert. (See blackboxvoting.com for info on these issues).

Thank you for your modification of what my signature says.

You still have to ask yourself though what is the race of the vast majority of the Enron executives, World Com executives who bankrupted ATT for over 4 billion, and the other super criminals in the business world.

Ask yourself what is the race of over 90% of the people in congress?

What is the race of the commanders in chiefs who have given the orders to attack so so so many tiny, innocent countries around the world?

Perhaps black people would do the same thing IF... they were in power in Amerikkka and had total control as Bush does. Since they are not, and probably never will be, we can't put them into the equation with how most whites think.

Hence my signature

YO JIM BO,

Is Peter Wallsten a Christian ?
- Then how would he know what is in the Hearts of Christians ?

Is the LA Times a Christian Newspaper ?
- Then why would any Christian read or pay attention to the LA Times ?

We have Christian Writers and Christian Newspapers to Read and to Gain Understanding from for 'guidance' in Living "Our" Christ Centered Lives.

Our Church 'members' {Not 'our' Church} are Active in "Getting-Out-the-Christian-Vote" here in our town OK-Land, Cali-4-Ni-A.

First - We have already canvassed the Neighborhoods for Christian Voters who will be Voting for "Our" President George "W" Bush.

Second - We have already assisted a hundred or more Christian Voters in Sending in their "Absentee Ballots". {What Would Jesus Do ?}

Third - Our Church 'members' have Volunteered to help drive a hundred or more Christian Voters to the Poles on Election Day to Vote.  {Christ in Action in Our Lives.}

This is just one small group of Church 'members' from one Church in one Neighborhood here in OK-Land, Cali-4-Ni-A.   I know of about 50 other Groups of Church 'members' here in town; that are doing the same thing:  Getting-Out-the-Christian-Vote for "Our" President George "W" Bush.
{Christians oming Together To Do God's Work.}

Think-About-It:  Multiply Christian-Action this across the State and across the Nation; in every Village, Town and City.
{It's a God Thing!}

Please Note:  That Cali-4-Ni-A is a Democrat 'controlled' State. We know We will not 'win' Cali-4-Ni-A.  But we know that the VOTE of Every Christian Will Be Counted in 'every' State.
{God's Will Be Done!}

It is the Duty and Responsibility of Every Christian Voter to Vote for a Man of God.
{"Our" President George "W" Bush is that Man.}

Just Vote - It's a God Given Right - Amen ~ RHF

That's too easy a question to answer! We weren't interested in GWB's lies!

America - shave your Bush!

FO&A,

Connecting your TV 'type' Coax Cable [Shielded] SWL Loop Antenna to your Table Top Shortwave Receiver or 'Portable' AM/FM/Shortwave Radio.

Table Top Shortwave Receivers:
For "Receivers" with a SO-239 Jack for the External Antenna you can use an "F" Jack to PL-259 Plug (SO-239 Adapter)
RadioShack Catalog # 278-258

'Portable' AM/FM/Shortwave Radios:
For "Radios" with a 1/8" Mono-Jack for the External Antenna you can use an "F" Jack to 1/8" Plug (1/8" Mono-Jack Adapter)
RadioShack Catalog # 278-257

~ RHF

That little quote was on a show tonight as an example of United States Imperialism even in the punctuation arena. A Scots professor was speaking of the history  of of Imperialist expansion throughout history and how the US is now emulating the Romans while denying any Imperialist expansion whatever.

The invasion of the Phillipines by the US was quoted as a comparison of the Iraq situation now.

Talk about war being �hell,� this war beats the hottest estimate ever made of that locality. Caloocan was supposed to contain seventeen thousand inhabitants. The Twentieth Kansas swept through it, and now Caloocan contains not one living native. Of the buildings, the battered walls of the great church and dismal prison alone remain. The village of Maypaja, where our first fight occurred on the night of the fourth, had five thousand people on that day�now not one stone remains upon top of another. You can only faintly imagine this terrible scene of desolation. War is worse than hell.

http://www.filipino-americans.com/cgi-bin/redirect.cgi?url=filamwar.html

Dragged by Galloping Horses. During the war, torture was resorted to by American troops to obtain information and confessions. The water cure was given to those merely suspected of being rebels. Some were hanged by the thumbs, others were dragged by galloping horses, or fires lit beneath others while they were hanging.

Another form of torture was tying to a tree and then shooting the suspect through the legs. If a confession was not obtained, he was again shot, the day after. This went on until he confessed or eventually died.

Villages were burned, townfolks massacred and their possessions looted. In Samar and Batangas, Brigadier General Jacob H. Smith and General Franklin Bell, respectively, ordered the mass murders in answer to the mass resistance.

Google shows you've used the term 'tard in over four hundred postings as of yesterday. You must have heard that word on the radio when you had your last major stroke. That would explain your inability to get it out your brain. It's burned there FOREVER.

'tard 'tard  'tard...

It must be hell having that going through your thoughts as you try and sleep at night. It's no wonder you don't sleep. The lack of sleep also explains your irrational behavior and the need to have thousands of .223 cartridges hidden in your attic.

Still planning on 'rectifying' the voters in Ohio on election day, you lunatic?

!!!TERRORIST ALERT!!!

I'm sure the FBI is interested in your upcoming armed attack of Canada.
That and the problems you are having with the voters in Ohio. How many thousands of cartridges have you got now? 2o thousand? 30?

Sane people don't hoard ammunition and AK 47s in their attics. How many hand grenades did you steal while you were in the Navy, Steve?

Time to get a shrink. You qualify for help, being a mentally disabled Vet.

Andrew Moseley (G7VOT) on October 27, 2004

Ofcom and the Radio Society of Great Britain are pleased to announce that all necessary procedures required for early access to the 7.1 to 7.2MHz spectrum for all UK radio amateurs have been finalised and that access is allowed from 0100UTC on Sunday 31 October 2004. Early access is granted on a Secondary (non-interference) basis using a maximum of 26dBW (400 watts) PEP.

Notices of Variation for the Foundation, Intermediate and Full licences have been published on the Ofcom website. orse code modes are used between 7.1 and 7.2MHz. B It is recommended that for the time being only voice and Mand planning issues on 7MHz will be kept under regular review and will be dependent on the number of administrations granting early access to this band prior to full Primary access on 29 March 2009.

The RSGB would like to offer its appreciation to all parties involved in the consultations, in particular the broadcasting industry, the UK Ministry of Defence, the Radiocommunications Agency and its successor Ofcom.
Please note that access to the extra 100kHz is only allowed from 0100UTC, and not midnight UTC, on Sunday morning. Or, put another way, from 2.00am local time, at which time the clocks are put back by one hour. Local time will then be 1.00am, the same as GMT or UTC.

The above article is care of the RSGB Members website

Ofcom hereby gives notice under section 1(4) and section 1E of the Wireless Telegraphy Act 1949 to holders of the Amateur Radio (Full) Licence that, with effect from 0100 on 31 October 2004 , the terms, provisions and limitations of each licence shall be varied as follows:

In this notice the "Booklet" means the Amateur Radio (Full) Licence Terms, Provisions and Limitations Booklet BR68, the terms of which form part of the Licence. As from 0100 on 31 October 2004 , each licence shall be read and construed as if the reference in the Licence to the Booklet were a reference to the Booklet containing the following changes. (1) Sub clause 8(4) shall be deleted and replaced by the following words

"For the purposes of sub-section 1(4) of the Act, this Licence may be revoked, or its terms, provisions or limitations varied, by a notice in writing of Ofcom, served on the Licensee, or by a general notice addressed to all holders of an Amateur Radio (Full) Licence published on the Ofcom web site or broadcast nationally by the British Broadcasting Corporation."

(2) the following extension to the Schedule were inserted after the row 7.000-7.100 MHz (the notes to the Schedule shall remain unchanged).

And a very fun 6 weeks it was, especially compared to all the other branches.  I worried almost all the way through up until I got to the "confidence course" (AF version of an obstacle course) and had so much fun doing that I even enjoyed that last week.  Ended up being an honor grad, too.

I hate to admit it, but it's true,  USAF basic is nothing compared to all the other branches.  It's almost too easy.

Um, I can't agree.  It appears that there -are- no WMDs in Iraq, true, but I doubt that you can substantiate, as you say above, that there -were- no WMDs.  As a matter of fact, depending on one's horizon, it is certain that there were WMD's in Iraq.  What is a matter of reasonable dispute is when there -ceased- to be WMDs in Iraq.

You are also incorrect in suggesting unequivocally that the Al Queda link is BS, as there's plenty of evidence of a connection, and, in fact, the report of our Senate Intelligence Committee acknowledged a connection.  The -extent- of that connection is certainly in doubt, as is whether Saddam provided any meaningful support, but there is more than enough evidence to debunk claims that a connection is BS.  In addition any such connection was not, as you also suggest, given as a serious reason the invasion.

Absolutely, and I'm glad to see you get that part of the plan.  Most critics do not.

There's also the possibility that DRM or any digital shortwave system won't always be free to the listener. It could become like subcription satellite radio, where the user has to pay for the service before the receiver is activated.

"Sound" open and being open are two different things.  I've had this didact before, but the gist of it is that the channels that "sound" open are only to allow that channel to be allocated in other areas, which in the Class C area that Chicago is in may be far, far away.  Putting an allocation on this "open" channel would result in interference to these far-flung operations, thus reducing their coverage area to less than what they're allocated to serve.  Same goes for the pirate.  If you look at a frequency search map, using the specified minimum distances to each conflicting allocation, you'll find that there is some apparent "white" areas as a result of the overlaps (or actually, the effort to make sure they don't overlap).

I am not.  Open channels (assuming that there are any, which certainly isn't the case in Chicago) mean that there are only a few possible voices that might offer diversity.  But there's still a finite limit to how many voices there will be.

This is different from printed matter or public oratory, where there is no self-limiting property in the exersize of one's free speech rights.  With broadcasting, the existence of one station prevents the free speech rights of those other "potential" operations on the same channel, thus depriving these "others" of their free speech rights.  Since the "others" don't have the opportunity, then neither should the operator of the facility which abridges the "others" of theirs.

Doesn't matter.  People pay for subscription services.  They get what they pay for, and if they don't like what they're hearing, they can cancel.  Broadcasting is different.  You can get conventional radio using devices which are readily available, require no real skills to install or use, and cost at least an order of magnitude less to acquire.  For those who have satellite receivers, after having made the effort, if they think it's the same, then it is for them.  But that doesn't make it so.

> If the fairness doctrine is really a good idea, shouldn't it effect every

As above.  Broadcasting is different.  The spectrum occupied is granted, in trust, by the people of the United States.  Broadcasters should be held accountable for serving all those people.  Whether they like it or not.

> Just why is the fairness doctrine a good idea?

Because we've seen what happens when it's not in place.

Well, then, that's not exactly what I'd call a good investment, is it?  Tell you what....pay me $500 to spread to the world what you have to say.  I promise I'll tell at least 15 people a day about your message for a month.  But I won't tell you how many people I'll tell, and those that I'll tell may have no means by which to acquire the service or goods you're selling, at that.  Deal?

Those days are long gone. The captain could lose his job now for letting any passenger into the cockpit area.

UN and IAEA are behind the planned CBS News Election Eve "Phony" 'bomb shell' Announcement about the Missing Explosives Story as an Attack on US President George "W" Bush.

YO JIM BO,

The Truth Shall Set You Free from the UN's Al Qaeda like "News Media Attack" to 'influence' the outcome of the US Presidential Election.

Now the "Rumors" {Off the Record - Background Information} is 'out' that Kofi Annan the Secretary-General of the United Nations; and Dr. Mohamed El Baradei the Director-General of the International Atomic Energy Agency" (IAEA); along with Hans Blix are all behind the leaking and promotion of this 'story'.

UN and IAEC are behind the planned CBS News Election Eve Missing Explosives Story to Attack President George "W" Bush and 'influence' the US Elections.

CBS NEWS PLANNED BUSH MISSING EXPLOSIVES STORY FOR ELECTION EVE
http://www.drudgereport.com/
* CBS - "60 Minutes" - Dan Rather PLANNED an Election Night Bomb Shell "Hit Piece" on President George "W" Bush.
* News of missing explosives in Iraq -- first reported in April 2003 -- was being resurrected for a 60 MINUTES Election Eve Broadcast designed to Knock the Bush Administration into a Crises Mode...

YES - CBS News Knowingly LIED about 350 Tons of High Explosives Looted during early US Occupation. {A Story that is over a year old.)

NBC News Reports: CACHE OF EXPLOSIVES VANISHED FROM SITE IN IRAQ BEFORE TROOPS ARRIVED...
http://www.drudgereport.com/nbcw.htm
* NBCNEWS reported: The 380 tons of powerful conventional explosives were already missing back in April 10, 2003 -- when U.S. troops arrived at the installation south of Baghdad!
* An NBCNEWS crew embedded with troops moved in to secure the Al-Qaqaa weapons facility on April 10, 2003, one day after the liberation of Iraq.
* According to NBCNEWS, the HMX and RDX explosives were already missing when the American troops arrived.
* NBC NEWS Jim Miklaszewski quoted one official: "Recent disagreements between the US Bush Administration and the 'head' of the UN International Atomic Energy Agency makes this announcement appear Highly Political."

It was Canada's fault. They did nothing to secure those weapons.

I think the President summed it up best when he said something along the lines of "A Monday morning quarteback never led a team to victory."

John Fraud Kerry is such a quarterback. And, when he did have a chance to lead his team to victory, he
quickly as he could. A real quarterback would have finished the game.

Strange, that's not what I've heard about that. Do you have a source for this?

If you look at the EMWG (http://www.emwg.info/), you see that the BBC worldservice is broadcasting at 1296 Khz both in AM and in DRM: 500 KW in AM and 70 KW in DRM.

AFAIK, both broadcasts have a simular service-area. (can somebody acknowledge or deny this?)

Anycase, concept-wize, it is a bit strange as DRM fills up it's 9 or 10 KHz bandwidth much more evenly then AM -which is more centered around the center-frequency). So, you should have much more "power/Hz" over the complete 9 or 10 Khz frequency-channel then in the case of AM.

Compair it to satellite. The energy-usage of a satellite if much better if a transponder is "filled up" with one single carrier then if you have multiple smaller carriers on that transponder.

Correct me if I am wrong!

Are you talking about DRM or IBOC/AM?

The bandwidth of a DRM station is exactly the same as a AM station (9 KHz on MW and MW, 10 KHz in SW).
It's IBOC/AM where there are digital signals outside the "normal" 10 KHz bandwidth in the US MW bandplan.

YO JIM BO,

Here are the latest 'facts' about what CBS "Intended" to do with this FAKE News Story concerning the Missing Explosives in Iraq.

Washington Post Staff Writer - Thursday, October 28, 2004

* On Sunday night, New York Times Executive Editor Bill Keller told Jeff Fager, executive producer of CBS's "60 Minutes," that the story they had been jointly pursuing on missing Iraqi ammunition was starting to leak on the Internet.

"You know what? We're going to have to run it Monday," Keller said.

* The article has also sparked criticism of the two news organizations from some conservatives, who accuse the Times and CBS of orchestrating a late hit against Bush.

* NYT Editor Keller said "60 Minutes" executives asked the newspaper to hold the story until the last Sunday two days before the Election; so they could report it the same day, and "we said we weren't comfortable doing that because it wouldn't give the White House a fair opportunity to respond."

* CBS - 60 Minutes Fager dismissed criticism of the timing as "absurd,"

* CBS - 60 Minutes Fager said it was "incredibly unfair" to link the ammunition story to the earlier "60 Minutes Wednesday" Fraudulent Report on Documents {Rather-Gate} about Bush's National Guard service, Which CBS Has Admitted It Can NOT Authenticate.

* The Bush Campaign release Tuesday accused the NYT of publishing a "false story,"

* Weekly Standard Editor Bill Kristol called CBS's plan to report the story this Sunday two days before the Election "really kind of stunning."

* The Wall Street Journal editorial page questioned the article's timing.

* Fox News' Bill O'Reilly questioned whether it was "a legitimate story or a dirty trick,".

* Tony Snow from Fox News said the article "looks pretty bogus" and is "an embarrassment to the New York Times and also CBS."

* Three NYT Reporters wrote the 'story' Monday, days after getting a tip from a CBS "60 Minutes" producer.

PART II - Russia tied to Iraq's missing arms - by Bill Gertz
THE WASHINGTON TIMES - 28 OCT 2004

* Russian special forces troops moved many of Saddam Hussein's weapons and related goods out of Iraq and into Syria in the weeks before the March 2003 U.S. military operation,
The Washington Times has learned.

* The Russian support to Iraq reveal that Saddam's government paid the Kremlin for the special forces to provide security for Iraq's Russian arms and to conduct counterintelligence activities designed to prevent U.S. and Western intelligence services from learning about the arms pipeline through Syria.

*  The Russian arms-removal program was initiated after Yevgeny Primakov, the former Russian intelligence chief, could not persuade Saddam to give in to U.S. and Western demands,

*  The most important and useful arms and explosives appear to have been separated and moved out as part of carefully designed program. "The organized effort was done in advance of the conflict,"

*  The Russian forces were tasked with moving special arms out of the country.

*  Foreign intelligence officials believe the Russians worked with Saddam's Mukhabarat intelligence service to separate out special weapons, including high explosives and other arms and related technology, from standard conventional arms spread out in some 200 arms depots.

*  The Russian weapons were then sent out of the country to Syria, and possibly Lebanon in Russian trucks.

*  The Russian units were dispatched beginning in January 2003 and by March had destroyed hundreds of pages of documents on Russian arms supplies to Iraq while dispersing arms to Syria,

*  The Russian "spetsnaz" or special-operations forces were under the GRU military intelligence service and organized large commercial truck convoys for the weapons removal,

YO JIM BO,

Here are the latest 'facts' about what CBS "Intended" to do with this FAKE News Story concerning the Missing Explosives in Iraq.

Washington Post Staff Writer - Thursday, October 28, 2004

*  On Sunday night, New York Times Executive Editor Bill Keller told Jeff Fager, executive producer of CBS's "60 Minutes," that the story they had been jointly pursuing on missing Iraqi ammunition was starting to leak on the Internet.
"You know what? We're going to have to run it Monday," Keller said.

*  The article has also sparked criticism of the two news organizations from some conservatives, who accuse the Times and CBS of orchestrating a late hit against Bush.

*  NYT Editor Keller said "60 Minutes" executives asked the newspaper to hold the story until the last Sunday two days before the Election; so they could report it the same day, and "we said we weren't comfortable doing that because it wouldn't give the White House a fair opportunity to respond."

*  CBS - 60 Minutes Fager dismissed criticism of the timing as "absurd,"

*  CBS - 60 Minutes Fager said it was "incredibly unfair" to link the ammunition story to the earlier "60 Minutes Wednesday" Fraudulent Report on Documents {Rather-Gate} about Bush's National Guard service, Which CBS Has Admitted It Can NOT Authenticate.

*  The Bush Campaign release Tuesday accused the NYT of publishing a "false story,"

*  Weekly Standard Editor Bill Kristol called CBS's plan to report the story this Sunday two days before the Election "really kind of stunning."

*  The Wall Street Journal editorial page questioned the article's timing.

*  Fox News' Bill O'Reilly questioned whether it was "a legitimate story or a dirty trick,".

*  Tony Snow from Fox News said the article "looks pretty bogus" and is "an embarrassment to the New York Times and also CBS."

*  Three NYT Reporters wrote the 'story' Monday, days after getting a tip from a CBS "60 Minutes" producer.

The Russians Did It ! -&- CBS Blew It !

Here are the latest 'facts' about what CBS "Intended" to do with this FAKE News Story concerning the Missing Explosives in Iraq.

Washington Post Staff Writer - Thursday, October 28, 2004

* On Sunday night, New York Times Executive Editor Bill Keller told Jeff Fager, executive producer of CBS's "60 Minutes," that the story they had been jointly pursuing on missing Iraqi ammunition was starting to leak on the Internet.
"You know what? We're going to have to run it Monday," Keller said.

* The article has also sparked criticism of the two news organizations from some conservatives, who accuse the Times and CBS of orchestrating a late hit against Bush.

* NYT Editor Keller said "60 Minutes" executives asked the newspaper to hold the story until the last Sunday two days before the Election; so they could report it the same day, and "we said we weren't comfortable doing that because it wouldn't give the White House a fair opportunity to respond."

* CBS - 60 Minutes Fager dismissed criticism of the timing as "absurd,"

* CBS - 60 Minutes Fager said it was "incredibly unfair" to link the ammunition story to the earlier "60 Minutes Wednesday" Fraudulent Report on Documents {Rather-Gate} about Bush's National Guard service, Which CBS Has Admitted It Can NOT Authenticate.

* The Bush Campaign release Tuesday accused the NYT of publishing a "false story,"

* Weekly Standard Editor Bill Kristol called CBS's plan to report the story this Sunday two days before the Election "really kind of stunning."

* The Wall Street Journal editorial page questioned the article's timing.

* Fox News' Bill O'Reilly questioned whether it was "a legitimate story or a dirty trick,".

* Tony Snow from Fox News said the article "looks pretty bogus" and is "an embarrassment to the New York Times and also CBS."

* Three NYT Reporters wrote the 'story' Monday, days after getting a tip from a CBS "60 Minutes" producer.

PART II - Russia tied to Iraq's missing arms - by Bill Gertz
THE WASHINGTON TIMES - 28 OCT 2004

* Russian special forces troops moved many of Saddam Hussein's weapons and related goods out of Iraq and into Syria in the weeks before the March 2003 U.S. military operation, The Washington Times has learned.

* The Russian support to Iraq reveal that Saddam's government paid the Kremlin for the special forces to provide security for Iraq's Russian arms and to conduct counterintelligence activities designed to prevent U.S. and Western intelligence services from learning about the arms pipeline through Syria.

* The Russian arms-removal program was initiated after Yevgeny Primakov, the former Russian intelligence chief, could not persuade

Saddam to give in to U.S. and Western demands,

*  The most important and useful arms and explosives appear to have been separated and moved out as part of carefully designed program. "The organized effort was done in advance of the conflict,"

*  The Russian forces were tasked with moving special arms out of the country.

*  Foreign intelligence officials believe the Russians worked with Saddam's Mukhabarat intelligence service to separate out special weapons, including high explosives and other arms and related technology, from standard conventional arms spread out in some 200 arms depots.

*  The Russian weapons were then sent out of the country to Syria, and possibly Lebanon in Russian trucks.

*  The Russian units were dispatched beginning in January 2003 and by March had destroyed hundreds of pages of documents on Russian arms supplies to Iraq while dispersing arms to Syria,

*  The Russian "spetsnaz" or special-operations forces were under the GRU military intelligence service and organized large commercial truck convoys for the weapons removal,

For anyone who is interested, here is one of the pictures I took of the eclipse:

<http://users.adelphia.net/~msholden/eclipse2.jpg>

It was taken on a Nikon D70 with a TMB 175 apo refractor.

Call to cut greenback in Beijing coffers

The dominance of United States dollars in the mainland's foreign exchange reserves poses a serious financial risk to the country, the China Daily warned.

A likely continuing fall in the dollar's value will cause substantial financial losses for the mainland unless policy makers reduce the high proportion of dollars in the country's foreign reserves, the editorial, by Jiang Ruiping, director of China Foreign Affairs University's Department of International Economics, said.

The editorial recommended that policy makers trim the ratio of US dollars in the foreign reserves in favour of the euro and the Japanese yen to avert the impact of a possible "US dollar crisis'' on China's economy.

"It is becoming more and more evident that the possibility of a further slump of the US dollar is increasing,'' the editorial said.

"To ward off foreign exchange risks, China needs to readjust the current structure, increasing the proportion of the euro in its foreign exchange reserves.''

The recent weakness of the dollar had wiped out more than US$10 billion (HK$78 billion) from the mainland's foreign exchange reserves, the editorial said, adding that more losses are likely unless the current reserve currency configuration is altered.

At the moment, US dollars make up two-thirds of the reserves.

Restaurant isn't ducking the question

Beijing - Customers at a restaurant in southern China are expressing their opinions about the US presidential elections by choosing duck dishes named after the candidates.

On the menu are Bush duck, a spicy concoction to match his "war-mongering personality", and Kerry duck, a more bony version with sauce, in line with his "keen-witted and capable nature", according to the Yangcheng Evening News.

So far, Kerry duck is ahead with 53%, while Bush duck trails with 47%.

"It's very interesting," said one customer. "I pick Kerry because he pledged that he will stop the anti-terrorist war that Bush started."

The restaurant owner said customers who voted for the winning candidate would receive a small prize.

Unrestricted Warfare: China's Master Plan to Destroy America

Did you know that China`s military manual first suggested the idea of bombing the World Trade Center?

As incredible as it may be to believe, three years before the Sept. 11 bombing of the World Trade Center a Chinese military manual titled Unrestricted Warfare touted such an attack - suggesting it would be difficult for the U.S. military to cope with.

Does anyone know if CRI or any other Chinese outlet still uses the 'East is Red' interval signal on any of its broadcasts at all?

On Thursday, Oct 28th, Don Imus opened his morning radio show by blasting Kerry as a liar who "can't tell the truth about anything." He mentioned Kerry's Boston Marathon lie, his baseball lie, and then went on to talk about the bogus explosives story, calling it "Kerry's current big lie."

And this is from a guy who says he's going to vote for Kerry!

In the meantime, the Democratic blogs are starting to blame the Republicans for the explosives story, saying it was planted by Carl Rove in order to embarrass the Democrats!!!!

Yep, just like the CBS forged documents were a Rove operation.  Uh huh.

Can you say "shot down in flames?"  That's where Kerry and his pals are headed for the final weekend of their campaign.

Imus is a radio personality.  Me 'thinks yer tin-foil hat is a wee bit askew.

LMAO at the "base my political views on what a disk jockey says" 'tard.

BTW - go buy a WinRadio.

www.winradio.com

Check out the 303 and 313 series radios.  You need a notch filter.

Propagation on 9580 is almost always quite good, and has been for years.

Wrong.  John Kerry is merely another creepy politician.  George Bush is a major threat to the USA and its traditions of freedom and individuality.

The problem now is Bush.  He is the current #1 butcherer outside of Outsourcing is OK.  We'll deal with it and win.  We can do that in America.  If we create an artificial business environment to protect jobs than we'll eventually die.  Let capitalism take it's course. I'll put America up against anyone any day.  We'll win eventually and get through the hard times.  Don't refute it.  I've got 200+ years of proof.

representative republic )

Liberal democracy is a form of representative democracy where elected representatives that hold the decision power are moderated by a constitution that emphasizes protecting individual liberties and the rights of minorities in society, such as freedom of speech and assembly, freedom of religion, the right to private property and privacy, as well as equality before the law and due process under the rule of law, and many more.

Such constitutional rights (also named liberal rights) are guaranteed through various controlled institutions and various statutory laws. Additionally the constitution of most of the contemporary liberal democracies protects the rights of individuals and minorities, and prohibits the will of majority (majoritarianism), by almost eliminating that rule in practice.

Pros and consSome would argue that liberal democracy isn't democratic or liberal at all. They would argue that "liberal democracy" does not respect majority rule (except when citizens are asked to vote for their representatives), and also that its "liberty" is restricted by the constitution or precedent (in the UK) decided by previous generations. They would argue that, by prohibiting citizens the right to cast votes on all issues (especially for serious subjects like going to war, constitutional amendents or constitution abolishment etc.), this turns "liberal democracy" into the precursor of oligarchy. Others would say that only a liberal democracy can guarantee the individual liberties of its citizens and prevent the development into a dictatorship. Unmoderated majority rule could - in this view - lead to an oppression of minorities.

Open society The concept of an open society is closely related to liberal democracies. Since many liberals see democracies with strong statist reflections through the public choice theory as slow, dogmatic, conservative and not too apt for change, the liberal democracy contrasts with what could be called the "statist" democracy in that it emphasizes the civil society as the engine of its public discourse and development further.

All and all, liberal democrats often simply see the civil society as exactly the best way to satisfy the private, cultural and communitarian preferences of minorities (as well as majorities). Democratically supporting the arts, private communities, sports leagues or other assocations in the civil society is seen by them to boost the majorities' preferences, either willingly or unwillingly by the policy makers.

Relation to indirect democracyAll liberal democracies are representative democracies. Some of these democracies have additional systems of referenda to give the electorate a possibility to overrule decisions of the elected legislature or even to make decisions by plebiscite without giving the legislature a say in that decision. Switzerland is one of the few liberal democracies with a representative system combined with referenda and plebiscites. Other countries have referenda to a lesser degree in their political system. Adding referenda to a political system could help prevent the evolution of a liberal democracy into an oligarchy.

Australia, Canada, the member states of the European Union, Iceland, New Zealand, Norway and the United States are all examples of somewhat liberal democracies (though of course it is sometimes argued that none is perfect with respect to the above rights).

That's exactly the point "'tard".   Both campaigns are out there advertising - trying to get people's attention - in the hope that they can persuade the voters.

Nothing but a radio personality?  Really?  I'm glad that you noticed that, Professor.

The man has an estimated 10 MILLION listeners and TV watchers on any given morning - waaay more than either campaign can reach in a single rally.  I'd say that's clout.  I'd say that's serious advertising.

When it goes negative because of a bogus news story about which Kerry is hysterically screaming, that HAS to hurt Kerry!

You need to educate yourself a little more, 'tard.  Otherwise, you're always going to be out of touch with reality.

You're welcome.

Unfortunately, the clouds rolled in quickly around 10:40 - so most of totality was obscured.  My later shots were taken through my Questar 700 so the public could look through the TMB, and I'm afraid I wasn't able to get critical focus with the Moon so dim.

If anyone is interested, higher resolution copies are available by email if you contact me directly.

Why reduce the AM shortwave broadcast band at all?  The AM SW BC bands have been expanded since the SW commercial utility stations have mostly left. Just let some of the new expansions go to DRM.

Maybe a station is equipped and licensed to operate on a certain frequency, so that's where they operate, DRM or AM. The real, logical reason might be that nobody though much about interference until now, and the implementation is haphazard.

Last night Sean Hannity had a kid on there who was with the 101. He says they found unlocked bunkers full of thousands of hand-grenades and RPGs. He gave the impression they moved on the next day without securing these weapons. This site is 15 minutes from Baghdad.

Incompetence. Then a cover-up. Bush knew on the 10th that this story was going to come out. Rather than face it 2 weeks ago he chose to stick his head under his pillow and hope it would go away.

he is not qualified.

Building a Matching Transformer for Shortwave Listener's Antenna using a Binocular Ferrite Core from a TV type Matching Transformer.

"The transformer is built around a toroid extracted from a TV "matching transformer". If you're a pack rat like me, you have a few in your basement: you typically get one with every TV or VCR (or you can buy one). Pop the plastic case off and snip the wires from the toroid (it looks either like a tiny donut, or a pair of tiny donuts stuck together). The transformer windings should be made with thin wire: I use #32 magnet wire.
*  The primary is 30 turns while
*  The secondary is 10 turns.
For a one-hole toroid, count each passage of the wire down through the hole as one turn. For a two-holer, each turn is a passage of the wire down through the right hole and up through the left.?
- - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - -

MY BINOCULAR FERRITE CORE MATCHING TRANSFORMER PROJECT:

Well I tried two different "Binocular" Ferrite Core to 'build' a Shortwave Listeners Matching Transformer for a Low Noise Antenna. I was using #30 Magnet Wire and these Ferrite Cores are very small 'tiny':  5.0mm H x 6.6mm W x 3.6mm OD x 1.8mm ID

But the maximum number of turns that I could get "In" and "Out" of the two small holes was 14 Turns.

So I had to settle for a Primary of 9 Turns with a Secondary of 3 Turns.

This would be equal to Primary of 18 Turns and a Secondary of 9 Turns using a standard One-Hole {Donut} Toroid Ferrite Core.

Has anyone built one of these with this few number of turns and:
If So ?  How Does It Work ?

* * * * * Binocular Ferrite Core TIPS * * * *
Here are some things to be Mindful of and Consider during the Matching Transformer Winding Process:

*  For these 'tiny' Binocular Ferrite Cores; you will be using the same small size AWG #30 Wire for both Windings.  So in your Stationary-End of the Primary Winding "Tie" an Overhand Knot to Identify 'it' after you have completed all your Windings.

*  After your first One and a Half Turns (1 1/2T) with the Wire Ends coming out of the Core from Opposite Sides PULL on both Wire Ends to Tighten the Wire Wraps (Loops)

*  Each Full Turn after the first 1 � Turns: 2 1/2T, 3 1/2T, 4 1/2T, 5 1/2T, 6 1/2T, 7 1/2T, 8 1/2T, 9 1/2T, ETC; with the Wire Ends coming out of the Core from Opposite Sides PULL on both Wire Ends to Tighten the Wire Wraps (Loops)

*  Wrap the Primary {Antenna}Turns First and Get-Them-Tight.

*  Place a Pencil and paper next to where your are wrapping the Wire through the Binocular Ferrite Core; and Mark Down Each Turn as you wind it.  I Prefer to start my 'count' When I start the Return-Pass-Through of the Wire.  [Starting from the Bottom the Wire goes Up (Out) through One Hole and then the Wire goes Down (Returns) through The Second Hole.]

*  Start the Secondary Turns from the Opposite-End from the Primary Turns.  Wrap the Secondary {Coax Cable} Turns and Get-Them-Tight.

*  If the Primary and Secondary are going to share a Common Ground then take one Primary Wire End and one Secondary Wire End and Twist them together.  [ Do Not Use the Primary Wire with the Knot at it's End for one of the Ground Wires.]

You will now have a "T" Shape Matching Transformer Assembly.
At the 'center' of the "T" will be the Binocular Ferrite Core.
The Vertical Leg of the "T' will be the Two Twisted Ground Wires.
The Left-Arm of the "T" will be the Primary {Antenna} Wire with the Knot at the End.  The Right-Arm of the "T" will be the Secondary {Coax Cable} Wire.

If you are making several of these TV Binocular Ferrite Core Matching Transformers.  Them you may wish to use some Model Paint of Nail Polish to Mark the Leads for easy visual identification of the Leads as you are working with them.
Red - Primary {Antenna} Wire.
Green - Secondary {Coax Cable} Wire
Black - Two Twisted {Ground} Wires

Bush supporters are ''believers''.

Kerry supporters are from the ''reality based community'' and are skeptics.

Which is more faithful to the spirit of the Founders of the USA?

Is it the duty of the citizen to not trust the government?

The allocated bandwidth of a DRM signal might be the same as a AM signal but, in the real world, the DRM signal has far more interference potential. DRM sounds as if it's putting an even amount of power out at all modulation frequencies.  This differs from standard AM which puts out the largest amount of power at the carrier, and the sideband energy is determined by the energy of the audio frequencies.  The audio frequencies are typically most powerful at the low frequencies and the power tapers off to a small amount at the high frequencies.  There normally isn't much sideband energy, proportionally, above 2kHz or so away from the carrier.

You're so brainwashed you won't take the time to find them.  They have been literally -everywhere- including the last time you lamely tried this same stunt and got a bunch of links that you certainly didn't bother looking at.  So why should I bother? This is not a big secret. The film has been debunked over and over and over--except for those uninformed enough not to be paying attention.

Somebody elsewhere in the thread gave you one of the links, but you'll never be able to acknowledge it simply because you are a classic ideologue who cannot handle having your preconceptions hallenged.  -That's- f'ing pathetic.

Actually, he wasn't, oh clueless one.  But that won't stop you from believing it.  Still having trouble answering my question.  Let's try again

Since your so concerned with "atrocities," I'm wondering where your posts are condemning car bombings in Iraq and Israel....or condemning Saddam, who killed hundreds of thousands in brutal ways....  Are you getting the picture as to how inconsistent your indignation is and why it's hard to take you seriously?  I suppose not.

Yes, of course, those car bombing women and children, or using suicide bomber s are no problem at all.

It's my understanding that the liberal elite had control of this lunar eclipse and planned to, without success of course, to reflect the words  "Kerry for President" on the moon's surface.

BTW - IF shifting can get rid of interferences that a notch filter

Nice try, but factually deficient as usual.  Next time you might actually try reading.

"5 EYEWITNESS NEWS e-mailed pictures of the material we found to experts in Washington Wednesday to see if it is the same kind of high explosives that went missing in Al Qaqaa. They could not make that determination. "

Now why would they do this if what they found was "proof of explosives at Al Qaqaa."?

 As a result of my previous question on Philco vs Zenith radios,
 I want to decide between a Philco 116X and the comparable Zenith ??? model of same vintage. I have heard and seen the Philco 116X and was impressed.
 I would like to check the equivalent Zenith but do not know what model numbers to pursue.

Thanks for all the previous comments.They were extremely helpful.

This seems like a good place to insert a discussion about a "shielded loop" being a myth for anything except for deeper nulls in the directivity pattern: (these were posted about 18 months ago).

Subject: Re: Loop Antenna questions

It's fairly easy to see that what Tom wrote (the first paragraph of quoted material below) is true. "Shielding" a loop simply moves the feedpoint to the gap, and the outside of the "shield" becomes the loop. It's no more or less immune to electric fields than any other loop. What "shielding" does (and all it does) is to increase rejection of common mode excitation, improving loop balance and the resulting pattern null in practical installations. The sensitivity of a "shielded" loop to both electric and magnetic fields is exactly the same as for an "unshielded" loop.

The myth that "shielding" a loop somehow rejects the electric field without affecting the magnetic field is one that's been kicking around the amateur community for decades. I don't suppose it'll ever die.

Another thing that seems to be unknown or overlooked is that a small (so-called "magnetic") loop antenna is actually more sensitive to an electric field and less sensitive to a magnetic field than a short ("electric") dipole, at all distances from the antenna unless the radiation source is very close -- within less than a wavelength.

After some reflection, I see that I can't really justify the statement I made. Thanks for questioning it.

Let me explain what I do know. The following discussion assumes that all antennas are lossless, to eliminate a factor that would obscure the subject under discussion.

If you put 100 watts into a very short dipole, the ratio of the E field it produces to the H field it produces is called the wave impedance. At a distance of considerably less than a wavelength, or greater, this ratio is about 377 ohms (in air or free space), and E and H are in phase. The same thing is true for a very small loop antenna, or any other small antenna. If you get far enough away, the E/H ratio is the same for any kind of antenna, although you might have to get a farther from an antenna that's large in terms of wavelength. Invoking the reciprocity principle, you find that the relative response of a small loop to E and H fields is the same as for a small dipole if the field originates some distance from the antenna. The so-called "magnetic" loop responds just the same as any other antenna to fields originating beyond a wavelength or so from the antenna.

What's interesting is the relative strength of radiated E and H fields close to the antenna. My overstatement was the implication that the ratio of E to H transmitted fields represent relative "sensitivity" to E and H fields when receiving. Contrary to what the CFA and EH proponents claim, it's not possible to generate E and H fields independently. And contrary to what people who misunderstand "shielded" loops say, it's not possible to isolate E and H fields. (It is possible to change the impedance of a wave -- that is, the E/H ratio -- in a region, but it always reverts back to the impedance of the medium -- 377 ohms for free space -- within a pretty small distance of the disturbance.) So sensitivity to an E or H field is somewhat problematic, since you can't create either one in isolation for a test. Consequently, I'll just discuss the E and H fields that the antennas produce when transmitting. I believe that an antenna with high transmit E/H ratio will be relatively insensitive to a wave with low E/H ratio (which would have to be created nearby), and vice-versa. But I can't quantify the relationship. I only know it involves the concept of transfer impedance, and I haven't given the topic enough study to say more about it. It is discussed in a number of texts, for those who are interested.

What I've done is look at the E/H ratio radiated by a small loop and a small dipole at various distances, in the direction of the maximum far field radiation (in the plane of the loop and broadside to the dipole).

The following analysis was done with EZNEC/4 using its double precision NEC-4 calculating engine. This was necessary because of problems NEC codes have with very small loops, and the size of loop I chose was too small for analysis with NEC-2. However, it could probably be done with MININEC, or it could be done with an NEC-2 based program like the EZNEC demo if the loop is made a bit larger. It's vital to set the loss to zero so that a negative feed point impedance isn't concealed by positive loss resistance. I've gotten email from a person who was skeptical of the results and did the calculations analytically. He came to the same conclusion, which gives me added confidence in the results. The following calculations were done at 3 MHz (100 meter wavelength).

Here's what happens. A small loop is sometimes called a "low impedance" antenna because of the low E/H ratio close to the antenna. This might be adequate justification for calling it a "magnetic" antenna as amateurs have taken to doing, but the term unfortunately conveys the mistaken impression that the antenna somehow responds only to or more strongly to magnetic fields coming far from the antenna, which isn't true. But very close to the antenna, the E/H ratio is indeed lower than the 377 ohm value this ratio always has far from the antenna. In exactly complementary fashion, a small dipole is a "high impedance" antenna, having an E/H ratio higher than 377 ohms very close to the antenna. Here are the values of the magnitude of E/H for a 2 meter (1/50 wavelength) circumference octagonal loop and a 2 meter long dipole at 3 MHz. The distance is measured from the center of the loop or dipole, and the direction is in the plane of the loop or broadside to the dipole.

| Distance (m) | E/H (ohms) | |
|---|---|---|
| | Dipole | Loop |
| 2 | 2630 | 63.9 |
| 4 | 1360 | 110 |
| 6 | 862 | 169 |
| 8 | 597 | 241 |
| 10 | 440 | 326 |
| 12 | 345 | 414 |
| 14 | 291 | 490 |
| 16 | 265 | 538 |
| 18 | 257 | 555 |
| 20 | 258 | 552 |
| 22 | 264 | 538 |
| 24 | 273 | 522 |
| 26 | 281 | 506 |
| 28 | 290 | 491 |
| 30 | 297 | 478 |
| 50 | 342 | 415 |
| 100 | 367 | 386 |

The curious thing is that, while the dipole field impedance is high close to the dipole, and low close to the loop, in both cases it overshoots 377 ohms by a considerable amount, reaching a peak (lowest Z for the dipole and highest for the loop) at about 18 meters, then asymptotically approaches 377 ohms from the "wrong side" beyond that. At all distances of 12 meters (about 1/8 wavelength) and beyond, the E/H ratio of the loop is actually higher than that of the dipole! That was the basis for my original statement. Whatever might be said about the "sensitivity" of a "magnetic" loop to E and H fields, it certainly can't be said to be more sensitive to H fields, or less sensitive to E fields, than a small dipole, at any distance greater than about 1/8 wavelength.

The exact sizes of the loop and dipole aren't important. The near fields at these distances are essentially equal for all small dipoles and for all small loops for a given input power, provided that they're much smaller than a wavelength in any dimension.

My understanding of the CFA/EH antenna is undeniably vague, but I think it goes something like this: The E and H fields are created independently, one by a capacitor-like part of the antenna and the other by a coil-like part of the antenna. This, as I said and as many others have pointed out, can't be done. Creation of a time-varying E field always results in a time-varying H field, and vice-versa. The E and H fields thus "independently" created are done so in the ratio of 377 ohms. This being the ratio of the the components in the far field, the direct synthesis results in the lack of a near field. This lack of near field is credited somehow with the magical properties of these antennas (high efficiency despite small size) by mechanisms that have never been clear to me. At any rate, these wonderful properties have never been demonstrated with either believable measurements or modeling despite more than a decade of hype, so it sure looks like they're fiction also. The EH antenna further distinguishes itself by requiring a magic inductor whose current at one terminal is shifted in phase 90 degrees from the current at the other terminal, adding yet another layer of impossibility.

If I've misinterpreted the explanations for how these things are supposed to work, I apologize -- it wasn't intentional.

It might. Remember, though, that this is constant in terms of wavelength, so the range drops by a factor of two at twice the frequency. (But on the other hand, the range will be greater at 160 meters.) Also, note that the difference isn't very great even at a distance of 10 meters. You have to get very close indeed to see a truly major difference. I suspect that major differences in interference rejection are as likely to be due to differences in balance (causing better or worse nulls) or polarization.

Yes, that's the conclusion I reach.

Sure, you can tell that by how "skeptical" they are about Fahrenheit

Many, many Bush supports are pragmatists; most Kerry supporters just

| You can't list 3 factual errors.  That's fucking pathetic.

Here are three, punk.  Why don't you suck on them, then come back for more?

One:

Moore creates the false impression that the networks withdrew their claim about Gore winning Florida when they heard that Fox said that Bush won Florida.

In fact, the networks which called Florida for Gore did so early in the evening-before polls had even closed in the Florida panhandle, which is part of the Central Time Zone. NBC called Florida for Gore at 7:49:40 p.m., Eastern Time. This was 10 minutes before polls closed in the Florida panhandle. Thirty seconds later, CBS called Florida for Gore. And at 7:52 p.m., Fox called Florida for Gore. Moore never lets the audience know that Fox was among the networks which made the error of calling Florida for Gore prematurely. Then at 8:02 p.m., ABC called Florida for Gore. Only ABC had waited until the Florida polls were closed.

Two:

How did Bush win Florida? "Second, make sure the chairman of your campaign is also the vote count woman." Actually Florida Secretary of State Katherine Harris (who was Bush's Florida co-chair, not "the chairman") was not the "vote count woman." Vote counting in Florida is performed by the election commissioners in each of Florida's counties. The Florida Secretary of State merely certifies the reported vote. The office does not count votes.

Three:

Moore shows scenes of Baghdad before the invasion (read: liberation) and in his weltanschauung, it's a place filled with nothing but happy, smiling, giggly, overjoyed Baghdadis. No pain and suffering there. No rape, murder, gassing, imprisoning, silencing of the citizens in these scenes. When he exploits and lingers on the tears of a mother who lost her soldier-son in Iraq, and she wails, "Why did you have to take him?" Moore does not cut to images of the murderers/terrorists (pardon me, "insurgents") in Iraq.or even to God; he cuts to George Bush. When the soldier's father says the young man died and "for what?", Moore doesn't show liberated Iraqis to reply, he cuts instead to an image of Halliburton.

Jeff Jarvis, "Watching Michael Moore," Buzz Machine weblog, June 24, 2004.

The most offensive sequence in "Fahrenheit 9/11"'s long two hours lasts only a few minutes. It's Moore's file-footage depiction of happy Iraq before the Americans began their supposedly pointless invasion. You see men sitting in cafes, kids flying kites, women shopping. Cut to bombs exploding at night.

What Moore presumably doesn't know, or simply doesn't care about, is that the building you see being blown up is the Iraqi Ministry of Defense in Baghdad. Not many children flew kites there. It was in a part of the city that ordinary Iraqis weren't allowed to visit-on pain of death.

.Iraq was ruled by a regime that had forced a sixth of its population into fearful exile, that hanged dissidents (real dissidents, not people like Susan Sontag and Tim Robbins) from meathooks and tortured them with blowtorches, and filled thousands of mass graves with the bodies of its massacred citizens.

Yes, children played, women shopped and men sat in cafes while that stuff went on-just as people did all those normal things in Somoza's Nicaragua, Duvalier's Haiti and for that matter Nazi Germany, and as they do just about everywhere, including in Iraq today.

Foreman, New York Post. For more, see the weblog of Iraqi Sarmad Zanga (part of which cites this report).

Fahrenheit points out, correctly, that the Saudi monarchy is "a regime that Amnesty International condemns as a widespread human rights violator." Fahrenheit does not mention that the Saddam regime was likewise condemned by Amnesty International. As AI's 2002 annual report noted, in April 2002 "the UN Commission on Human Rights adopted a resolution strongly condemning 'the systematic, widespread and extremely grave violations of human rights and of international humanitarian law by the Government of Iraq, resulting in an all-pervasive repression and oppression sustained by broad-based discrimination and widespread terror.'''

[Moore response: None.]

ME,

Follow-Up Questions:

If it only has 'one' IF Filter is used for the AM, AM-SYNC and SSB Modes of Reception ?

How does the Sony ICF-SW7600GR manage to 'create' the different Band Widths for these three Modes of Reception ?

Any Help or Information would be Appreciated

I just bought another vintage Autek QF-1 audio filter for my bedroom radio and they work very well but I was also looking at the Timewave and just curious if it would work in AM mode. The QF-1 is from the 70s and hard to beat. If you have a older radio and want to bring it up to par filtering wise the QF-1 and also any of the Gilfer filters ( If you can find them ) are the way to go. Actually the Gilfer filters are the best in my opinion.
Their not in business anymore.

Nothing wrong with spinning the news anyway you want to.

Hey Steve,
This is too much!  As an MSU alum I say let them have Ann Arbor and frankly Detroit is no loss either - can only improve Michigan to be rid of them both.  Sparlingville?  I recall the bridge being in Port Huron - though mustering outside the city seems like a wise tactical decision.  Just a thought though, if we give Detroit and Ann Arbor to Canada will it really be necessary to shell them - having those two cities seems like more than sufficient punishment.

the politics of Mosh

by kid oakland
Wed Oct 27th, 2004 at 05:47:03 GMT

What is there really to say?
Other than to straight up hand it to Eminem, Dr. Dre, Ian Inaba, Anson Vogt, Kevin Elam and Thomas Brohdal and everyone else who had a hand in the making of this video?

Watching this video is one of those experiences that just changes you. Mosh has a transformative power. Like, before I clicked on my computer this morning and downloaded the thing....well, I thought and felt one way...about Eminem, the youth vote, our troops, the state of oppositional culture in America, the meaning of this election, what George Bush means to young Americans...and afterwards, I just had huge fucking scales fall from my eyes....

I felt this powerful sense that I had just seen something calibrated exactly for this moment, something hopeful and disturbing and honest...something spoken from the crux of this hour in our history and yet resolutely looking forward. Mosh is political art that, at the same time, speaks in an authentic and specific voice. It is art that seems to bear a power to unleash something new.

This diary is attempt to get at why that is...what Mosh says and what it means.....right now...

i. Private Kelly: thinking about your rage

There is a pivot moment in Mosh that defines the entire video for me....it comes about one third of the way in, cartoon Eminem is rapping to a huge audience of men...and as the camera pulls back we see that they are soldiers in desert fatigues...

All you can see is a sea of people, some white and some black
Don't matter what color, all that matters is we gathered together
To celebrate for the same cause, no matter the weather

the camera zooms in on one soldier who is not nodding his head like the others. He is morose, angry, he is thinking as he listens to the music. This is our introduction to Private Kelly. And, as strong as the other depictions are....of Eminem himself, of Swift, of Tenant 508...I think that Private Kelly at this moment is the core of the video.

Mosh is a polemic that is intended to make you think about strong feelings; strong feelings that you have because of the political situation you find yourself living in. Quite specifically, Mosh is intended to allow you to internalize the anger, the hate, and the rage that the videos' young protagonists feel...and yet, Mosh gets you to channel it, gets you to think about what you and they might do with that anger and hate and rage, to think about why you and they feel that anger and hate and rage.

Private Kelly's sunken-cheeked, grimaced face, angrily meditating on the music, alone in the crowd, is at the core of the politics of this video.

ii. the structure

Mosh works inside of multiple frames.

The first frame is a public school classroom on 9/11. The two are joined. One is utopian and appeals to our sense of community and shared civic responsibility. The other is dystopic and represents the use of the machinery of that utopia against itself. We don't get one without the other. That's the start point and world view of Mosh.

The second frame is Eminem/Bush.....and here we get Eminem taking on the "persona" of Bush in order to explode it and play with it. In this case, in portraying himself as GWB reading "My Pet Goat" in a school directly underneath the Trade Towers on 9/11....Eminem is laying out for us that this entire video is going to be a kind of battle between these two personas, the one exploding what we think of the other. Eminem, however, will both play a critic of Bush and, eventually put himself forward as a kind of citizen leader for us. That's important, and is implied in the humorous glimpse we get of Eminem as GWB, and later, in his shirt and tie again, signing in to vote against Bush.

The third frame is the Wall. The Wall is critical to establishing the political context of the video. The wall is where the "person" of Eminem...Marshall Mathers...is sorting out for himself what to think of the news of the day. It's personal. He's got himself up there in the form of photos from his life...and Bush is there as well, in newspaper headlines and in photos with his father. (Fwiw, the visual is also a quote of Picasso's Guernica...a blank wall, a bare light bulb, an artist depicting what he thinks about a War.) The wall is important because it implies that Marshall Mathers has been trying to think this through for a long time. That he has made it a personal project to put up what he thinks and feels about our times, with evidence from newspapers and hand-written commentary. And we see him, in stop-time animation, go through this.

The fourth frame is the protagonists: Swift, Private Kelly and Tenant 508. This frame is the story of the three protagonists whose course we will follow through the video, as they reflect on what they see and what happens to them...and then "hood up" and join the mosh mob. Swift, (or at least a cartoon version of Swift, a member of Eminem's group D12), who gets racially profiled on his way home to see his dad. Private Kelly....an alter ego for Marshall Mathers, a soldier about to be reassigend to Iraq and away from his family. And Tenant 508, a single mom about to be evicted with her children...who finds herself watching TV news at the same time as she finds out she's been evicted.

the fifth frame: is the motion of all of the characters in the video from disenfranshisement and rage to coordinated action and showing up to vote. It is critical that this is shown as a thought-out decision: we see each character reflect and decide and then join. This links back through all the first four frames. In effect, Eminem is positing voting as a response, not simply to Bush and the war, but to 9/11, the longstanding injustices visited on our protagonists and the evidence on the Wall.

Finally, it's important to see the motion of the fifth frame as a powerful antidote to voter suppression and the "wall of fear" strategies of the GOP. If it rains let it rain, the wetter the better begins a visual arc that carries us through the video in which the voters face rain and police intimidation...and even the challenges represented by the civic character of the polling place where you have to sign in and maybe stand in a long line. If you are voting explicitly as a rejection of "fear" and "intimidation" and as a response to Iraq and 9/11, as Eminem implies we are, then why would you let intimidation and fear stop you from voting?

iii. playing with fire

On a simple and emotive level...Mosh spends much of its time using massed and hooded "mosh mobs" moving through rainy urban streets to convey a kind of "Fight Club meets Election 2004" vibe. The animations look similar to the video games Grand Theft Auto and State of Emergency....anarchic, anti-authoritarian, juvenile fantasies written as over-the-top games where violence actually becomes a funny and meaningless digital language, the equivalent of bumper cars.

Instead of getting fixed on what might be dangerous and wrong in that....it occurs to me that Eminem is simply being honest and meeting his intended audience where they are at. These fantasies are part and parcel of the mental world of young folks today. Indeed, as we speak, the vast majority of those who've seen this video right now are much more likely to live next to a Suburban Mall with a Starbucks...than down the block from Eight Mile. But this fantasy space....the urban poverty fantasy...is how Eminem gets his audience to internalize the political content of the video.

And it is critical that the video, even when it is depicting the hooded "mosh mobs"...is very clearly about something other than violence and acting out rage. Just because it uses that vocabulary and visual palette, does not mean its audience will not fully understand that it is not about that. In fact, I'd argue that that is part of the point of Mosh.....to take its audience from a world of juvenile fantasy that plays off their dystopic feelings...to a more thoughtful and programatic response to what they are experiencing in the real world. In effect, Eminem is using Grand Theft Auto and Fight Club to bring his viewers out of inchoate rage and anger, and showing them how to create a more thoughtful, strategic, coordinated response. A political response.

iv eminem's politics

There is a brilliant line in this video that just keeps bouncing around in my head:

Let me be the voice, and your strength, and your choice
Let me simplify the rhyme, just to amplify the noise
Try to amplify the times it, and multiply it by six Teen million people are equal of this high pitch Maybe we can reach Al Quaida through my speech....

at which point we see Tenant 508 turning a radio dish from the top of a building.

On top of advocating a thought-out, political, pragmatic way out for his audience's rage and anger....voting on November 2nd....Eminem, in this passage expresses something that goes beyond that.  In essence, Eminem is positing a world in which thoughtful citizens who are victims of the powers that be, might actually be able to communicate with one another more effectively than those powers.  It is a decentered, free speech, ground-up democracy that Eminem is preaching here.

This is powerful stuff.  And there are more hints of this in other parts of the video.  November 2nd is not depicted as an end point for the political struggle Eminem describes...it is just a beginning.  It's not an answer, it's just a necessary first step.  Part of which is a rebirth of oppositional culture and informed participatory democracy...and part of which is a recentering of the political process on the voices of those who have not been listened to.

We mosh for the future of our next generation, to speak and be heard, Mr. President, Mr. Senator

Can you hear us?.......

v there's so much more here

a.. From the amazing content of the wall...Bush knew...Sick wounded troops held in squalor...Senate upholds ban on Coffin photos...Bush Tax Cuts help Rich...

a.. to the brilliant depiction of Bin Laden as cardboard cutout in a news st udio, hiding Cheney and Rumsfeld cheerfully chatting away  (a move which highlights how Bin Laden has been used as a bogeyman.)

a.. to the personalization of Eminem's battle with Bush along the lines of one's relationship with one's father a.. to Swift's relationship with his own father, and how Swift's dad joins him to vote a..

a.. the amazing scene with Private Kelly on the steps with his angry wife and kids a.. and how Swift and Private Kelly use the fire hose to defuse the Police Officers and riot police blocking the mosh mob's path to vote....

a.. and finally, Eminem's posture to the flag. His adoption of it..and his depiction of it flying in the rain and as having been stolen by Bush.

And, finally, these two quotes which are destined to reverberate this election season and forward:

And as we proceed, to mosh through this desert storm, in these closing statements, if they should argue, let us beg to differ, as we set aside our differences, and assemble our own army, to disarm this weapon of mass destruction that we call our president, for the present and this:

If it rains let it rain, yea the wetter the better
They ain't gonna stop us, they can't, we're stronger now more then ever,
They tell us no we say yea, they tell us stop we say go,
Rebel with a rebel yell, raise hell we gonna let em know Stomp, push up, mush, fuck Bush, until they bring our troops home
vi. mosh the vote

For me, I think the honestly and directness of this video, and the way Eminem shows himself to be forthrightly political: a figure who reads, and thinks and tries to figure things out, are startling and add to its power. The fact that it begins and ends with the public school kids. The fact that Eminem does not sugar coat the situation we are in right now. A dystopic utopia....that we need to struggle to find our way out of only makes me respect it more.

In some ways as confused a political metaphor as Moshing is, it is the right one for this time and place. We do indeed have to muddle and fight our way through the fog of this moment, this dystopia...to see that the "clear eyed" leader we've been following has been anything but. We need to reject him to reclaim our damaged utopia and begin to rebuild it:

Look in his eyes, it's all lies, the stars and stripes
They've been swiped, washed out and wiped,
And Replaced with his own face, mosh now or die

Which both plays off of rap's fatalism...and plays into the quite American sentiment:

Live free or die.

I think the most brilliant aspect of Mosh is simply its imperative to think about one's rage and to channel it. I keep coming back to Private Kelly in that crowd.

And I wonder, if today, in Iraq, some real Private Kelly is getting a chance to see this video for the first time...and what he or she thinks...good or bad....and what rage he or she must feel face to face with the very real, very troubling dystopia that is the United States occupation of Iraq.

Your points are noted Howard and will be taken into consideration as tactical preparations are being made.

I just sent out an email requesting that all units try to come up with as much tracer ammunition as they can, in a most expeditious manner.

Several individuals have responded that they have as many as 6000 rds of ammunition apiece, and a lot of armor piercing rds.

Still looking for more 50 cal. rifles and ammunition for same.

Please monitor the Alpha freequency for more updates and plans.

Steve,
Yes, we are a representative republic - but without standing in defense of the previous poster, this is a form of a democratic government in which we elect people to handle the affairs of government versus direct participation.  Another thing that most folks aren't aware of is that our voting rights are not established in the Bill of Rights and we did not have 'universal sufferage' until the 1960's. Though we call ourselves a "Developed Nation" we are in fact still developing - which I think is a good thing.

You've never once deviated from an extreme right position. You're not objective so there's no reason to listen to you. You might also try typing a little less verbiage. It makes it painfully obvious that you have too much time for the computer. You need to find a man.

LMAO at the one-sided 'tard.

John-the moron-Kerry doesn't let something like not knowing the facts stand in the way of making an attack. He has been taking lessons from his biggest supporter, CBS and Dan Blather.

We all know Kerry never tells the truth.  He hates America.  You don't have to tell us.  We know it.  We also know CBS is not so secretly on his side.  It's so damn obvious.  It is.  Really.  Kerry has authorized ABC to start working for him too.  You'll see what I'm talking about on election eve.  The big networks are in his pocket.
They're all commies.  Every damn one of them.  Most scientists are communists too.  It's obvious.  They're all French.  SOB's.   Why don't you French F'in scientists love America?  Get OUT!!!!

Sure it does.  Most religions don't recognize the Christian concept of sin.

If one isn't Christian, and one does something Christianity disapproves of, so what?

Where's that idiot that I was talking to the other day about Ann Coulter being assaulted? I pointed out the fact that it only seems to be liberals that get physically violent, and he hasn't responded.

Not that I blame him.

Don't be ashamed of your sexuality, William. You're just as God made you. :)

This is pure b.s.  There were and are no WMDs in Iraq.  The thefts you refer have nothing to do with WMDs, no matter how much you try to make it so.  It just ain't so.

I thought those who support this war had moved on to "it was a good thing to take out a dictator" and other such explanations that departed from the first two unfounded explanations (the other being the Al Quaeda link that was also b.s.).

Al Quaeda has moved into Iraq since the invasion: handy place to confront Americans.

On Wed, 27 Oct 2004 11:36 am, MnMikew <mnmiikkew@aol.com> posted to rec.radio.shortwave: %MM

> Wait a minute - so there were WMDs in Iraq? The Kerry campaign, the media, assorted pundits, and others are making much of the disappearance of the 380 tons of explosives from the Al Qaqaa storage facility south of Baghdad. According to the IAEA, the U.N. watchdog agency now apparently in the service of the Democratic National Committee, some of the explosives could be used to detonate nuclear weapons. Wow - nuclear-weapon components were in Iraq? Shouldn't the headline be, "Saddam Had 'Em?"
> The opposition really needs to get its story straight. The president cannot be taken to task for inventing the Iraqi WMD threat, and simultaneously disparaged for not securing Saddam's dangerous WMD-related materials. The cache at al Qaqaa was not the only WMD-related material in the news recently. Another IAEA report came out two weeks ago that did not get as much play. According to this account, dual-use equipment that could be used to make nuclear weapons was taken from various locations inside Iraq. The Duelfer Report speculated this equipment could have been taken during the chaos of the invasion. The equipment was "professionally looted" by another account, and may have gone to Iran or Syria. Isn't it significant that equipment that could be used to make nuclear weapons was there in the first place? Don't these constitute components of a WMD program? As well, if CBS wants to recycle old news in an attempt to influence the election, how about this story: 1.77 metric tons of low-enriched uranium and other nuclear material at the Tuwaitha Nuclear Research Center (Saddam's main nuclear research and development center) was secured by the United States and flown out of the country last July. According to the Energy Department this material could have been used to make a radiological dispersion device (a.k.a. a dirty bomb) or "diverted to support a nuclear weapons program." The only thing we found in Iraq that was more hazardous than this haul was Saddam Hussein. The United States was able successfully to deny this dangerous material to terrorists, rogue states or anyone else. This good news story dropped like a stone when it came out. And unlike most of the hype of the last few days, this story has the benefit of being true. The missing explosives from al Qaqaa also raise the possibility that other WMD-related materials met the same fate. The IAEA had seen the al Qaqaa material in January 2003, but by the time U.S. troops showed up on April 10, they had disappeared. The dual-use technologies mentioned in the other IAEA report also had been moved or looted. This suggests that still other WMDs and related technologies might have been given or taken away in the days leading up to the war, or shortly after the Coalition attacks began. It is widely believed, though not conclusively proved, that much of this went to Syria. The Iraq Survey Group interviewed Iraqi agents who claimed to have

I heard that the US has 735 bases in other countries around the world.  How many of these have stations that can be listened to on SW?  That's a lot of bases, a little world all it's own.  There's probably a database somewhere.

The only place on the cabinet that gets warm at all is the area of the vents over the transformer on my unit. Front panel does not get warm.

The one warm spot on top is about 2 degrees over room. If it was any less you would not be able to tell it was warm.

I'm such a fool. All this time, I swore that -anything- was better than country. I truly deserve punishment; should I read three of yojimbo's post, or four?

I don't want to be unduly harsh on myself.

>There are those who plan to WRITE IN Jesus Christ for president, though

How do you cast a write-in vote on an electronic voting machine?

I've always heard that Americans were allowed to write in anyone they choose when they votee. However, Ohio has already refused to let voters write-in a candidate when the voters wanted to cast a write-in vote. Ohio's refusal was because "the electronic voting machines aren't set up that way". Because "that candidate isn't on the voting machine".

So now, Americans have somehow lost the right to vote for anyone they choose and can now vote only for governmentapproved candidates that are already listed on the voting machines.
Even though there was never any law passed outlawing voting for write-in candidates, that I'm aware of.

Al Qaeda is the one that declared war on America by causing the 9/11 attacks and then claiming that they were the ones that did it.

And wasn't it Al Qaeda that sided with the ones who said that Bush wasn't elected by Americans, but stole the election by refusing to let the opposing party of Democrats vote.

SH,

As you have suggested, a 'phase-in' Implementation of DRM over a number of years:
*  Years 1-5 each Shortwave Band would have 25% dedicated to DRM.
*  Years 6-10 each Shortwave Band would have 50% dedicated to DRM.
*  Years 11-15 each Shortwave Band would have 75% dedicated to DRM.
*  After Year 16 each Shortwave Band would have 100% dedicated to DRM.

IIRC:  The current 'channel' Spacing on the Shortwave Bands is 5 kHz.

With the phase-in implementation of DRM, wouldn't a 10 kHz, 20 kHz or even 25 kHz be a more acceptable and practical 'channel' Spacing to reduce interference from any 'adjacent' Channels.

We have the Diebold touch screens here in L.A....for each office, right under the candidates, is a blank space. Touch it, and an onscreen typewriter keyboard shows up...just tap in the name and you're done.

Fortunately for dxAce that person is me and I think DRM should go into the dust bin of bad ideas.

Well, DRM uses digital technology and it "works" but the claims are false. This technology is no better than what we have now in total.
Some things about it are better others things are worse.

Greetings!  What a shame.  Losing another shortwave station of their quality is not an easy loss.  I hate to see shortwave get the short end of newer technologies, but alas, change is inevitable.  Jon.

DRM modulation appears to make conversion efficacy worse ~57 - 65% compared to AM ~65 - 74%.

| Steve,
| Yes, we are a representative republic - but without standing in
| defense of the previous poster, this is a form of a democratic
| government in which we elect people to handle the affairs of
| government versus direct participation.  Another thing that most folks
| aren't aware of is that our voting rights are not established in the
| Bill of Rights and we did not have 'universal sufferage' until the
| 1960's. Though we call ourselves a "Developed Nation" we are in fact
| still developing - which I think is a good thing.
| Enjoy the eclipse - it is too cloudy to view from Southern California.
| Howard

We're in the same boat, Howard - fog and more fog here in the South Twin Cities tonight.  And you're right - the nation is, indeed, involving, and we employ a democratic process to ensure prudent (well, prudent-ISH) governance.

Has anyone ever used one of the magnetic loop antennas sold by Waters and Stanton?

http://www.wsplc.com/acatalog/Magnetic_loop_antennas.html

Get a load of the prices on these things! I'm not in the market for one, but I'm curious about whether anyone can comment on the performance of these antennas.

We can agree on this. I setup my DX392 in deer camp last weekend and hooked it to a 70' random wire and still didnt get much other than the usuall suspects. Gonna try the DX402 insted this weekend. So, whats a good tabletop thats semi-portable? I have a DX394 at home and was going to use that once I upgrade the home reciever.

True.  I don't like Kerry.  But I'm scared of Bush.   BTW - I love Coldplay.  They rock.

Ya gotta love "ordinary" explosives - real deadly without the bad rap nukes get.

Thanks.

Here's a shot of M57 I did a couple months back:

<http://users.adelphia.net/~msholden/m57.jpg>

The main problem I have with shots like this is light pollution. If I go long enough to make the central star easy to see, the background starts to wash out.

But taking these photos while listening to my "portable" 7030+ is fun.

Also, for those interested in tuning in Jupiter on their shortwave radios, here's a link with information. I suspect most of us have better radios than the kit they offer:

Regards,

Mark

I do too, and, with your usual insight and intelligence, you've cut right to the heart of the issue.   For the average person seduced by propaganda, ideas and substance do not matter, images matter. Goebbels and Leni Riefenstahl were propagandists of the first order, so they knew this.  Moore is a propagandist of the first order, so he knows this.  If you have access to unlimited amounts of footage of a person in the public eye that you can spin anyway you want, you can paint a picture and make people forget to think about substance. They'll say "just watch...."

True, shortwave broadcasters could charge a fee for digital shortwave signals. Given that they have established competition in the form of subscription satellite radio, free FM and free AM broadcasts and internet radio I think they will find the market share small. The shortwave broadcasters face the challenge of convincing their listeners that spending good money on a special purpose radio and a monthly fee will provide a big improvement in radio programming. It will be a very steep hill to climb.

I could see digital broadcasts to local stations which then rebroadcast in either standard MW or FM.

Warren Co., NC has a machine with a column of buttons down each side.
The screen will have a block for write in.  Press the key beside it and a screen similar to what he mentioned pops up.  Just type in the name you want.

There will be a way - either a touch screen or a button to select the
"write in" blank box.  ... possible other ways.

Instructions are with most machines, but I'm not sure if they are in Spanish, French, German, Chinese, Russian and Arabic.  :-)   I guess we have grounds for contesting the election.  They didn't have instructions in the language of some illegal alien's native language.  What is America coming to?   ... or going to?

This brings a question to my mind - if one hears and QSLs a relay of, say, VOA from a place like, say, Thailand or Botswana, does that "officially" count as a country heard and QSLed, or is it just another QSL from VOA?  If you hear China Radio International only on its Cuban relay, have you heard China or Cuba?  In many cases, like VOA in Botswana, RNW in Madagascar or a pile of others like BBC or France, the relays are the strongest and easiest signals to catch, and frequently the only ones in a language that we provincial Yanks can understand...

I realize that there may be varying opinions on this one, but I would weigh the opinions of experienced DXers with some additional gravity...

I haven't gotten a QSL since, and I'm thinkingit might be fun to start a new album :-).

Thanks,

Bruce Jensen

Blame Canada
(From South Park: Bigger Longer & Uncut)

Times have changed,
Our kids are getting worse
They won't obey their parents,
They just want to fart and curse. Should we blame the government, or blame society, or should we blame the images on tv No!
Blame Canada! Blame Canada

With all their beady little eyes, their flapping heads so full of lies Blame Canada!
Blame Canada!
We need to form a full assault, it's Canada's fault!
Don't blame me, for my son Stan, He saw the darn cartoon, and now he's off to join the klan! And my boy eric once, had my picture on his shelf, but now when I see him, he tells me to fuck myself

Well, Blame Canada!

It seems that everything's gone wrong since Canada came along
Blame Canada!
Blame Canada! They're not even a real country anyway.
My son could of been a doctor or a lawyer, it's a true,
Instead he burned up like a piggie on a barbecue.
Should we blame the matches? Should we blame the fire, or the doctor who allowed him to expire. Heck no!
Blame Canada!

Blame Canada!
With all their hockey hubaloo and that bitch Anne Murray too. Blame Canada!
Shame on Canada!

The smut we must stop
The trash we must smash Laughter and fun
must all be undone
We must blame them and cause a fuss
Before somebody thinks of blaming us!

R. Victoria, Lima, Peru - suspected

Early this morning, 10/28/04 0445 to after 0500 UTC, I listened to a station on 6020.24, in Spanish, with what sounded like a dynamic revival speech by a high-powered preacher.  This went on until 0457, then gentler announcements over soft cheerfully reverent background music, followed by a return to the dynamic speaking mode at 0500.

I have QRM coming and going, and right about the time when an ID would have been expected the noise level shot up and drowned the station before I could subdue the noise; but the QRM subsided and the signal became clear again.

Overall, SINPO = 22232, only significant interference was bleedover from bubble jammer on Radio Marti 10 kHz away, signal varied from S2 to as high as S8.  If this is R. Victoria, and they are operating 5 kW as stated, then it is certainly the best signal I have ever received from a Peruvian station, and the best signal from a 5 kW station over that distance.  As this frequency is typically clear at this time, I will try this again tonight.

Yeah, we care what Imus, the has been has to say. I'm glad you look up to him. But wait, you look up to a ex drunk Cocaine abuser who is brain dead without a script to read from in front off him. Kerry gives full speeches at rallies without a piece of paper.

Are you a redneck hick by any chance or just plain dumb born and raised?

Tell me when we find the weapons of MASS DESTRUCTED that we invaded Iraq for and over 1000 young boys and innocent Iraqi citizens were killed for NOTHING.

But wait, not for nothing. bush and his cronies get kickbacks from the billions we are spending on the war machine. That's after the looted the taxpayers for over 8 TRILLION AND left ourt kids a massive deficit.

Ask senior citizens how they feel about the 17% increase in Medicare while the top 2% of the richest people in the country get back 87 BILLION in tax cuts. That's 87 billion that could have been used to help the deficit, not having a 17% increase on Medicare for ederly people or better Home land security.

How about Hallibuton over charging and robbing the tax payers? Do you know cheney the pig still gets paychecks from them?

Only dumb redneck religious nuts with no education like bush and you fit right in with them.

Kerry will win the election by a nice margin. Then you tobacco chewers can "shoot the bull and have a Bud" by yourselves...

Seriously, the 0:00 to 3:00 UTC Central Am./Caribbean BBC relays on 5975 and 11835 sure have been having a lot of audio dropouts lately.
One yesterday coincided with a lightning atmospheric, maybe WYFR hasn't fixed all the hurricane damage yet and got a minor zap.

Oct. 27, 2004 - Iraqi officials may be overstating the amount of explosives reported to have disappeared from a weapons depot, documents obtained by ABC News show.

The Iraqi interim government has told the United States and international weapons inspectors that 377 tons of conventional explosives are missing from the Al-Qaqaa installation, which was supposed to be under U.S. military control.

But International Atomic Energy Agency documents obtained by ABC News and first reported on "World News Tonight with Peter Jennings" indicate the amount of missing explosives may be substantially less than the Iraqis reported.

The information on which the Iraqi Science Ministry based an Oct. 10 memo in which it reported that 377 tons of RDX explosives were missing - presumably stolen due to a lack of security - was based on "declaration" from July 15, 2002. At that time, the Iraqis said there were 141 tons of RDX explosives at the facility.

But the confidential IAEA documents obtained by ABC News show that on Jan. 14, 2003, the agency's inspectors recorded that just over three tons of RDX were stored at the facility - a considerable discrepancy from what the Iraqis reported.

The IAEA documents could mean that 138 tons of explosives were removed from the facility long before the United States launched "Operation Iraqi Freedom" in March 2003.

The missing explosives have become an issue in the presidential campaign.

Sen. John Kerry has pointed to the disappearance as evidence of the Bush administration's poor handling of the war. The Bush camp has responded that more than a thousand times that amount of explosives or munitions have been recovered or destroyed in Iraq.

Another Concern

The IAEA documents from January 2003 found no discrepancy in the amount of the more dangerous HMX explosives thought to be stored at Al-Qaqaa, but they do raise another disturbing possibility.

The documents show IAEA inspectors looked at nine bunkers containing more than 194 tons of HMX at the facility. Although these bunkers were still under IAEA seal, the inspectors said the seals may be potentially ineffective because they had ventilation slats on the sides. These slats could be easily removed to remove the materials inside the bunkers without breaking the seals, the inspectors noted.

I'll take your word for it, but when I learned the term it only seemed to mean a radio with a tuned RF stage, implying nothing more about the radio. Kinda had the sense of "air-conditioned car".

You do realize that corporations don't pay taxes, they only collect them from their customers, right? All a corporate tax is is a price hike in the corporation's products or services.

You do realize that corporations that pay less taxes have more money left over to hire employees, right? Jobs are only created when companies have money to hire employees.

You do realize that this bill also closes lots of loopholes and tax shelters, which should make the $136 billion cut return $82 billion, right?

You do realize that $10 billion of this money is earmarked for buying out tobacco farmers, right? That makes it $126B in cuts and $10B for the anti-smoking jihad.

Other than the office of President and VP, I'm not even sure there's any requirement for election at all. I don't know of any Federal law that prevents a state from choosing its senators and congressmen by lottery or by giving the offices to the highest bidder.

I've heard it said that WLS has serious grounding problems at their antenna, and has been too cheap to repair them. That would explain a lot.

By contrast, both at my old home and my new one WBBM can put THREE VOLTS peak-to-peak into a loopstick antenna. WGN is over 2-1/2 VOLTS. Both places are over ten miles from the respective antennas (which aren't far from each other IIRC).

FAHRENHEIT 9/11: Fox was the first network to call Florida for Bush.
Before that, some other networks had called Florida for Gore, and they changed after Fox called it for Bush.

�With information provided from the Voter News Service, NBC was the first network to project Gore the winner in Florida at 7:48 pm.  At 7:50 pm ,CNN and CBS project Gore the winner in Florida as well.� By 8:02 pm , all five networks and the Associated Press had called Gore the winner in Florida. Even the VNS called Gore the winner at 7:52 pm. At 2:16 am, Fox calls Florida for Bush, NBC follows at 2:16 am. ABC is the last network to call the Florida for Bush, at 2:20 am, while AP and VNS never call Florida for Bush. CNN:

http://www.cnn.com/2001/ALLPOLITICS/stories/02/02/cnn.report/cnn.pdf
Ten minutes after the top of the hour, network excitement was again beginning to build. At 2:16 a.m., the call was made: Fox News Channel, with Bush's first cousin John Ellis running its election desk, was the first to project Florida -- and the presidency -- for the Texas governor. Within minutes, the other networks followed suit. "George Bush, Governor of Texas will become the 43rd President of the United States," CNN's Bernard Shaw announced atop a graphic montage of a smiling Bush. "At 18 minutes past two o'clock Eastern time, CNN declares that George Walker Bush has won Florida's 25 electoral votes and this should put him over the top."PBS:
http://www.pbs.org/newshour/media/election2000/election_night.html
FAHRENHEIT 9/11: The man who was in charge of the decision desk at FOX on election night was Bush�s first cousin, John Ellis.

�John Ellis, a first cousin of George W. Bush, ran the network's �decision desk� during the 2000 election, and Fox was the first to name Bush the winner.  Earlier, Ellis had made six phone calls to Cousin Bush during the vote-counting.�  William O�Rourke, �Talk Radio Key to GOP Victory,� Chicago Sun-Times, December 3, 2002.
A Fox News consultant, John Ellis, who made judgments about presidential �calls� on Election Night admits he was in touch with George W. Bush and FL Gov. Jeb Bush by telephone several times during the night, but denies breaking any rules.  CNN, November 14, 2000; http://www.cbsnews.com/stories/2000/11/14/politics/main249357.shtml.
John Ellis, the Fox consultant who called Florida early for George Bush, had to stop writing about the campaign for the Boston Globe because of family �loyalty� to Bush. CBS News, http://www.cbsnews.com/stories/2000/11/14/politics/main249357.shtml, November 14, 2000.
FAHRENHEIT 9/11:  �Make sure the chairman of your campaign is also the vote countin� woman and that her state has hired a company that�s gonna knock voters off the rolls who aren�t likely to vote for you. You can usually tell them by the color of their skin.�

�The vote total was certified by Florida's secretary of state, Katherine Harris, head of the Bush campaign in Florida, on behalf of Gov. Jeb Bush, the candidate's brother.� Mark Zoller Seitz, �Bush Team Conveyed an Air of Legitimacy,� San Diego Union-Tribune, December 16, 2000.
The Florida Department of State awarded a $4 million contract to the Boca Raton-based Database Technologies Inc. (subsidiary of ChoicePoint).  They were tasked with finding improperly registered voters in the state�s database, but mistakes were rampant. �At one point, the list included as felons 8,000 former Texas residents who had been convicted of misdemeanors.� St. Petersburg Times (Florida), December 21, 2003.

Database Technologies, a subsidiary of ChoicePoint, �was responsible for bungling an overhaul of Florida�s voter registration records, with the result that thousands of people, disproportionately black, were disenfranchised in the 2000 election.  Had they been able to vote, they might have swung the state, and thus the presidency, for Al Gore, who lost in Florida. Oliver Burkeman, Jo Tuckman, �Firm in Florida Election Fiasco Earns Millions from Files on Foreigners,� The Guardian, May 5, 2003 http://www.guardian.co.uk/usa/story/0,12271,949709,00.html.  See also, Atlanta-Journal-Constitution, May 28, 2001.

In 1997, Rick Rozar, the late head of the company bought by ChoicePoint, donated $100,000 to the Republican National Committee. Melanie Eversley, �Atlanta-Based Company Says Errors in Felon Purge Not Its Fault,� Atlanta Journal-Constitution, May 28, 2001.  Frank Borman of Database Technologies Inc. has donated extensively to New Mexico Republicans, as well as to the Presidential campaign of George W. Bush. Opensecrets.org, �Frank Borman.�

It doesn't matter if they are the ''same''.  They are dangerous items 20 miles from Baghdad, easily used by the insurgency, and they were unguarded.  And Bush was moving the Army so quickly they left lots of these sites unguarded and these materials are now being used against us.

Incompetence.

How fitting is it that the Kerry campaign is going to crash and burn in this last week because they made a huge deal out of an outright lie by the New York Times and CBS in an effort to defeat the President? Really, it just couldn't have happened any other way. There's an old saying about stuff like this. We're not sure if it's Buddhist, Confucianism or what, and it goes something like this - "Karma's a Bitch".

For the last 2 years or so the left wing America-haters have been spouting lie after ridiculous lie about George Bush. You could say these were the founders of the movement. You know who they are - the Moveon.org crowd, Michael Moore, Al Franken, the list goes on and on. Originally the claims were about things like phantom voter disenfranchisement in Florida during the 2000 election, and that the President let Osama Bin Laden's family leave the country right after September 11 when American flights were grounded.

However, with the sudden and unexpected rise of Howard Dean, we actually found out what we thought was the lunatic fringe was actually the mainstream of the Democratic party. Thus, in order to secure the nomination John Kerry had to join them. That was his first mistake - largely because he was already there, but next to Howlin' Howie he seemed like a fascist.

Thus, Kerry took on the persona and causes of the lying left and made it his campaign platform. However, like the gambler who can't walk away, Kerry spouted one lie too many, and because of it he'll forever be a Senator from Massachusetts.

You can tell just how desperate Kerry has become in the last week or two by the sheer audacity of his lies. Recently he's been scaring people into thinking that the draft is coming back, made unsupported allegations that Bush has a "January Surprise" to reduce social security, charged Bush with having a "secret plan" to raise milk prices in Wisconsin, and claimed that Bush paid more attention to tax cuts for the rich than he did Osama Bin Laden. The list goes on and on.

But Kerry should have quit while he was ahead (or to be more accurate, almost tied). He showed his desperation and willingness to say anything by grabbing onto the "NYTrogate" story way too quickly, even putting out a TV ad in less than a day. By locking himself in that the phantom "disappearance" was the result of Bush's incompetence, he sealed his fate.

In less than 48 hours the story is coming apart faster than a virgin's gown on prom night. You can tell just how bad it is when the publisher of the lie, in this case The New York Times, is retreating quicker than a French soldier.

Let's examine their latest attempt to keep the story going. In the interview three unnamed Iraqi's and a worker at the munitions plant to try to show how bad the looting was.

The score in these big heists? What's mentioned in the article is computers, "anything of value" in the office, and things that "looked like artillery". Further, the article mentions "grabbing anything they can find" and tossing unwanted items off of trucks. Hey, it's not 385 tons of dangerous explosives, but it's close enough for an attempted "October Surprise" at the Times.

We're sorry, we shouldn't make fun. We can easily see how a stapler and computers could be mistaken for 385 tons of explosive material. ABC News is now reporting there may have been only 3 tons of explosives at the plant; less than 1% of the original reported total of 385 tons. Hell, the same story was forced to quote the American Commander on the ground to say what is just common sense to us normal folk - that it would have been near impossible to move nearly 400 TONS of explosives on roads being heavily traveled on a daily basis by US armed forces. I mean, it's not as if they were stealing hard to see things.

As the day wore on the story got even flimsier. This report quoting John Shaw, deputy undersecretary of Defense says that the Russians took those explosives to Syria in March, 2003, a month prior to American troops arriving. I guess this showed "incredible incompetence" right Senator Kerry. I mean, how dare he not secure weapons in a place where there were no American troops? Perhaps Senator, the blame for this lies with you and your ilk for insisting for months that we fart around with the corrupt French, Germans and other feckless UN Nations. Senator, will you apologize for this error? Didn't think so.

Next came a report that in February, 2003, two months before the invasion, that Mohammed El Baradai of the UN Atomic Energy Commission told the UN that Iraq reported the explosives had been transferred for use in quarries" Hmm, doesn't that make it kind of hard to guard stuff at Al-Qaqaa when it's really in a quarry (or in Syria)? But I'm sure the Senator will run a commercial blaming the President for failing to secure Iraqi quarries.

Hell, even Kerry's own spokespeople admitted they didn't know if the weapons were there when American forces arrived. Richard Holbrooke said on Fox News that: "I don't know what happened" [with regard to when the explosives were removed] and later on, this bombshell from Mike McCurry: "..there is a window that�s available there where either just prior to or just after the invasion, there could have been an opportunity for either Saddam to move the weapons or for something happening after that facility had been abandoned."

Read the quote from McCurry again. They admit the explosives could have been removed by Saddam before the invasion, yet they continue to act as if the President did nothing after the invasion to stop the weapons from being stolen. Only in Kerryland is such logic accepted.

Still, we think the best retort to Senator Kerry was from the President himself in Lancaster today when he said: "Now, the senator is making wild charges about missing explosives. One of his top foreign policy advisors admits he doesn't know the facts. He said, 'I don't know the truth.' End quote. Well, think about that. The senator is denigrating the actions of our troops and commanders in the field without knowing the facts....and a political candidate who jumps to conclusions without knowing the facts is not a person you want as your commander in chief." Amen Mr. President.

Thus, a campaign that was built on the lie that the President "lied" about WMD's, that he "rushed to war", and numerous other outrageous lies will have been brought down by the truth. Kerry had a window in these last week to take his best shot and it wasn't (and really still isn't) out of the question he could have pulled it off.

However, a leopard can't change it's spots, and he had to pile on just one more idiotic, outrageous lie, with of course the help of the national press. But we think that when he's alone in one of John Heinz's homes in a few months wondering what might have been, he's going to look back on this last week's events and want to jump off a bridge. But he won't. He'll just get in the 40 foot yacht, on the private jet, or on the $8,000 exercise bike to try to run away from his frustrations. But he won't be able to.

He's going to spend the next 30 years of his life regretting he couldn't stop lying for 1 week.

Even the UN acknowledged there were WMD in Iraq. They officially deplored

Incompetence. Hmmmmmm... I think incompetence was the fact that your daddy

How's that for incompetence?

Republicans believe only citizens can vote, and no person can vote more than once.

Liberals consider that disenfranchisement of their power base.

They do, they just don't call it sin. Every religion has taboos. Every religion recognizes certain things you must do to achieve that which is desirable, and every religion recognizes certain other things one must not do so as to avoid losing that which is desirable.

 ANTARCTICA. Chris, N3SIG, informs OPDX that he has been redeployed to the Antarctica to McMurdo Station some time in the first week of November. He is expected to be there until March 5th. However, Chris adds that the ham shack's antennas there were destroyed, and they also suffered damage to the main HF rig. He plans to hand carry a HF rig from home in PA to Antarctica. When Chris gets there, he will construct a dipole and will be on the air as KC4/N3SIG mainly on 14243 kHz (The unofficial Antarctica ham freq). He may also be on 40 meters, too.

The Record (Canada) April 05, 2003
U.S. troops find signs of chemical readiness

In-Depth Coverage

SOURCE: Associated Press

As the military advances closer to Baghdad, signs of Iraqi chemical preparedness are multiplying, although there is still no conclusive evidence Saddam Hussein possesses any weapons of mass destruction.

Yesterday, troops at a training facility in the western Iraqi desert came across a bottle labelled "tabun," a nerve gas and chemical weapon Iraq is banned from possessing.

Closer to Baghdad, troops at Iraq's largest military industrial complex found nerve agent antidotes, documents describing chemical warfare and a white powder that appeared to be used for explosives.

UN weapons inspectors went repeatedly to the vast al Qa Qaa complex, most recently on March 8. But they found nothing during spot visits to some of the 1,100 buildings at the site 40 kilometres south of Baghdad.

Col. John Peabody, engineer brigade commander of the 3rd Infantry Division, said troops found thousands of five-centimetre by 12-centimetre boxes, each containing three vials of white powder, together with documents written in Arabic that dealt with how to engage in chemical warfare.

A senior U.S. official familiar with initial testing said the powder was believed to be explosives. The finding would be consistent with the plant's stated production capabilities in the field of basic raw materials for explosives and propellants.

According to UN weapons inspectors, who spoke on condition of anonymity, the Iraqis filled warheads and artillery shells with explosives at the site and manufactured bomb casings there. The activities, for conventional weaponry, were allowed under UN resolutions. But the resolutions, passed after the 1991 Gulf War, ban Iraq from possessing chemical, biological and nuclear weapons and the long-range missiles to deliver them...

> Here in Chicago, we just had an AM xband station go on the air a year ago. Other frequencies sound open. One street gang related pirate station was operating on an open FM frequency here. We also have a couple of reletively new low power UHF stations.

It's commonly not understood by non-engineers that a radio station (broadcasting or otherwise) causes interference over a much wider area than it provides service. This is especially true on AM where multiple signals on the same frequency mix together.

The new Chicago X-band station moved from downstate - Johnson City IIRC. A station on that frequency in Chicago would not have been allowed if WRLL had been operating downstate.

As for the seemingly-open FM frequency, that depends on the quality of one's receiver. I can ensure you my car radio (1998 Ford Escort) finds NO open FM channels anywhere along the Edens/Kennedy/Ryan/Skyway corridor. (and I'd be amazed if it found one open anywhere else in the Chicago city limits) The frequencies either side of WUSN (99.3, 99.7) sound open but that's because WUSN is running IBOC!

On the other hand, one could take that to extremes... my home receiver provides useful reception of several Memphis stations, 170 miles away. Should we prohibit any Nashville station from operating on a Memphis frequency?

The new LPTVs have (probably, I don't know the specific channels) become possible as a result of the FCC relaxing certain "taboo channel" regulations. They acknowledge a major improvement in the selectivity of UHF TV tuners since 1952. Many FM receivers haven't improved significantly in selectivity since the 1950s.

> Right. And viewers/listeners don't really make the distinction between cable and satellite and broadcasting anymore. If 90% of a person's TV channels are uneffected by the fairness doctrine, does the fairness doctrine have any effect on the viewer?

Y'know, this is a dilemna in light of the Commission's new decency push.

How does OTA broadcasting compete with TBS, HBO, XM, or Sirius? When the former industry is restricted by decency rules, while the latter isn't?

How does enforcing decency rules against OTA stations accomplish anything when most homes have content-unregulated premium channels? When a growing number of cars have content-unregulated XM receivers? So little Johnny doesn't learn what a breast looks like from Janet Jackson on CBS. He'll figure it out the next night when he tunes past Showtime during a program that shows a whole lot more than Jackson did...

Cable TV channels use radio transmission (via satellite) to link their programming to your local cable system. XM and Sirius use radio transmission (again via satellite, and now also terrestrially) to deliver their programs to your radio.

IMHO the FCC has grounds to regulate both services on content if they chose to do so. IMHO they need to either do so, or lift content regulations on OTA.

Yeah, but isn't that largely a matter of definition and policy? As I understand, the FCC used to try to keep a 30 kHz spacing between stations in the same market, now they'll go for 20 kHz. In my opinion, there are already too damn many stations on the air, using my personal standard of maximum allowable interference. But if the FCC doesn't much care about more interference, they could pack more stations in.

Even if a broadcaster refuses to broadcast an opposing view on his station or stations, he is only restricting one outlet for the opposing speech. So what? The Soviet Union had an entirely controlled media. Every paper, every broadcaster was owned by one monopoly. Yet some version of the truth got around. Printed material from typewriters and photocopiers were handed around. Phone calls were made. The Soviet media lies increased cynicism, not indoctrination. Control of one station or one broadcast network would be even less persuasive, especially if other outlets for opposing viewpoints are available.

If people don't like what they hear on a broadcast, getting rid if it is even easier than canceling.  They just tune out.

I'm not sure I catch the reason why the fairness doctrine is necessary with broadcast stations but not necessary with pay services.  I don't think it has to be a jurisdictional thing, as some Congressmen have proposed extending decency standards to pay services and the internet.

Anyway, I can't think of any reason a satellite direct broadcast service must be a subscription service.  If satellite technology gets cheap enough, the networks might well launch their own, advertiser supported satellites. It's also easy enough to imagine the satellite receivers would be easily affordable.

With cable systems, there's no practical distinction between cable channels and broadcast channels.

They do serve people, by entertaining them.  That's what broadcasting is good at. Broadcasting is a poor educational media. People who want to actually learn something read about it. Or converse with someone knowledgeable. Or, best yet, do it. I suppose broadcasting could be whipped into a decent educational media with VCRs and tape recorders so people could go back and forth until they actually understand what's being discussed, but they hardly ever do. Broadcast information goes into the air for an ephemeral moment, and then it's gone. Guys like Limbaugh and Hannity are successful, not because they are informative, but because they're entertaining.

I suppose there are a few doofuses who think they are getting some sort of political education from the broadcast loudmouths who are putting on a show within the limitations of broadcast media.

The biggest difference I've noticed is there is less boring programming on Sunday mornings.

I do live in a dense urban area, so some of the interference I'm getting may be from various household appliances. It's very intermittent.

And all the power lines in my immediate neighborhood are above ground, including a power pole and lines about 30 feet from my back door.

But I'll stop worrying about BPL.

Thanks,

As if any of this has anything to do with Bush. Everyone with any military knowledge knows that the military officers are the ones making the calls in that situation. I can't understand how some people can actually believe that the President is an actual "Military Planner". If you want to blame someone, blame the leaders in the military.

DAVID,

" Is it the duty of the citizen to not trust the government ?"

We are a Republic with a democraticaly "Elected" Representative from of Government.

We 'The People' ARE the Government [.]

You may not trust yourself. - But I Do Trust Me.

I Believe IN Myself and I Believe IN and Have Faith IN My Government [.]

For I Have FAITH And I BELIEVE - Amen

God Bless "Our" Men and Women Who Serve In and Out of Uniform - Amen

God {Allah} Bless America and Our "Elected" Leaders - Amen ~ RHF

Please Note:  This Prayer is for Everyone of Our Elected Leaders: Bush, Kerry, Clinton, Boxer, Hatch, Obama, Feinstein, McCain . . .
God Bless them One and All.

 The opposition really needs to get its story straight.

 No, they don't. And that's the problem. Liberals will KNOWINGLY ignore facts that disprove their beliefs. They will willingly believe any and all statements that glorify their heroes or denigrate the other side, no matter how wildly inaccurate the statements may be.

This is true for some Bush supporters as well. Everybody thinks that they are right and no one wants to back down. It's ridiculous. These politicians have you all so riled up that you can't see the forest for the trees.

SANDMAN,

STORY # 1.

I Did Run the Boston Marathon and Finished It !

Never saw John 'ff' Kerry at the Start.

Stopped at the Top of Heart Break Hill and turned around and Looked Back and John 'ff' Kerry 'Was Not There' [.]

Never saw John 'ff' Kerry at the End.

But throughout the Whole Boston Marathon Race I did Hear flip-flop, Flip-Flop. FLIP-FLOP !

The first day on the Job as an Inspector I was told to:

*  Get the Facts.

*  Write Them Down.

*  Then Open Your Mouth.

It is Clearly Evident that the John 'ff' Kerry Campaign went around Shooting Off their Mouths; before they 'got the facts'.  And then they are blaming the Campaign of Geroge "W" Bush for their failures.

Looks Like More Typical "Kerry-O-Ke" Thinking :o) ~ RHF

* * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * *

But, John 'ff' Kerry is NOT Presidential Material [.]

So Say I - My Opinions Stated As Facts ~ RHF

By RichardG3VGW

When I joined the BBC in 1962 at Daventry there were just the two overseas relay stations for BBC World Service transmissions, at Cyprus and at Tebrau on the southern tip of Malaya. At Daventry we had a special huge array, an HRRS 8/6,and two transmitters in parallel on 17.79 MHz. that was used mainly for feeding Tebrau with programme.  For political reasons, after Singapore split from the Malaysian Federation, the Tebrau station closed and a new station was built at Kranji on Singapore Island.

In those days I never dreamed that I would one day visit the area at the other end of that beam!  Even travel to Europe in those days seemed only for the rich!  A few years ago I was able to visit my brother - in - law Robert (G4BWB) who was living in Hong Kong at that time and was able to visit the BBC relay station there not long before it closed.

Robert has now moved to Singapore where he is a TV producer and he invited my wife and I to visit him and his family this autumn.  We went out there, taking in Dubai and Hong Kong on the way to see if there had been any changes since our last visit.   We arrived in Singapore in mid-November for a 2 week stay with Robert and his family.  I had already contacted Kranji by e-mail and they had kindly offered to let me visit the station during our stay.

I must admit that before my first visit to Hong Kong I had assumed that it was totally covered with buildings, as this is the impression given by all the tourist photos.  I was surprised to find how much countryside there is in the territory.  I had the same impression about Singapore and a casual visitor to the island would tend to agree, as there are large areas of high rise apartment blocks, apparently covering every inch of the island.

Once again, my impression was proved wrong.  I telephoned Kranji to arrange a time for my visit and they warned me that I might have difficulty finding them and gave me detailed instructions, as they doubted that even a local taxi driver would know where they are!  The address of the station is 51, Turut Track, which might give the impression that there are many other buildings along that road.

However, consulting Robert's street directory, page 39 revealed that Turut Track was in the middle of a blank page, with only one other building shown.

There is an excellent Mass Rapid Transit (MRT) rail system in Singapore and one of its stations is Kranji.  Robert and I set off on the MRT and as the train approaches Kranji you can indeed spot the red and white towers of the radio station over to the West, looking as though it would be only a short walk to reach it.  However, the map reveals that in the way is the large Kranji reservoir.

We eventually managed to hail a taxi and sure enough the driver had never heard of the place or even of Turut Track. With the aid of the map I was able to direct him, which involves driving north to the coast, with its views of Johore Baru across the strait, then crossing over the dam at the reservoir and then heading south down a lonely road surrounded by green countryside. In fact it could almost be an English country road were it not for the banana and palm trees!

Eventually a small sign on the left proclaims 'BBC Far Eastern Relay Station' and Turut Track turned out to be just that, a narrow track that winds past the radio station owned by the local Singapore radio authority and then ends abruptly at the gate of the BBC station.

We were greeted by the operations manager, Yong Wui Pin, who took us to his very pleasant air conditioned office and introduced us to the two charming ladies who look after the administration there. One of them, Cindy Yeo, told us that she had been there almost since the station had opened and she invited us to sign the visitors book. They seemed genuinely pleased to see visitors and I was quite surprised to see that my name was the first entry in the book for 2001.

Obviously, given their location, they do not get many people passing by! In fact, the previous signature in the book was that of Mark Byford, the World Service boss, so we were in illustrious company.

Mr. Yong then showed us first around the stores and workshop areas, all nice and cool and air-conditioned. It was quite a contrast when we went out into the transmitter hall. Here it was very hot, even though our visit coincided with the 90 minute period when the station is shut down for maintenance.

To me, apart from the heat, it was a moment of great nostalgia! Way back in 1963 I was transferred from Daventry to Woofferton, the station located near the Welsh border, which at that time was primarily a Voice of America relay station and was just in the process of having its World War 2 vintage 50 kW RCA transmitters replaced by then brand new 250 kW Marconi BD272 units.

Nearly 40 years later, it was a bit of a shock to step into the sender hall at Kranji to see almost a replica of Woofferton, with those Marconi units still giving sterling service. The BBC has always called its short wave transmitters 'senders' for long forgotten reasons and at Kranji they are numbered Senders 102, 103 etc..

The BD272 units need manual wave changing, which in practice means they need to be closed down for 15 minutes at a minimum to manually remove some very large, heavy (and hot!) coils, insert ones for a different band and then tune up the sender on its new frequency. The final anode coils for the 41 & 49 metre band are very impressive, the antenna coupling coil is a single turn over a metre in diameter and made of tubing about 12 cms. across - quite a beast! Doing a rapid wavechange at Woofferton in cool England made you sweat profusely, I can imagine in the heat of Kranji, you rapidly lose some weight!

Power for the station is supplied by the local electricity authority and is transformed and rectified down to 11,000 volts D.C. to supply the anodes of the two BY1144 triode valves in grounded-grid configuration in the final stage of each sender. At full power these draw 26 amps. anode current, so some quite serious power is being consumed. The senders use high level modulation, which means they need something in excess of 125 kW of audio to give 100% modulation. This is provided by two more BY1144 valves in class B configuration. This means that the current they draw varies wildly with the modulation, thus the current being drawn by the station is not constant, particularly if all the senders are carrying the same programme. I remember that in Ludlow near to Woofferton, all the lights in the houses flickered in time with the modulation and when the Greenwich Time Signal 'pips' were broadcast at the top of the hour, you could check your watch by your house lights!

The sender hall is raised above ground level and when we went out of the hall we found ourselves on a balcony overlooking the aerial farm. I soon realised the reason for not going down into the field, the lush tropical vegetation is infested with some very nasty snakes - not a problem I had doing aerial switching at Woofferton! I was told that crocodiles had also been spotted in the area. Thus their 4 aerial rigging staff had to take great precautions when going out to their tasks in the field. All the aerial switching is done by air operated switches remotely controlled from the building, which must be a great relief to the staff!

Although the station is now operated by Merlin, the station still has a BBC 'feel' to it and I was interested to learn that the station operates on a three shift system with similar hours to that worked at the UK stations. Day shift is I think 09.00 to 17.00, evening shift is a short one until 23.00 and the night shift is the long one until 09.00. This used to be quite a good system, well liked by most staff, as it meant on evening shift you had most of the day free and could still be in bed by midnight.

Programme feed to the station is by satellite, via AsiaSat, and I was interested to hear that they now have no HF receivers for back-up if the satellite feed fails. BBC World Service in English is available for local listeners on 88.9 MHz FM, the programme feed for this is received at Kranji but is fed on to a site located with all the other domestic transmitters in the centre of the island.

I asked if they receive many reception reports at Kranji from SWLs and was told that they are forwarded to Bush House, London. (You know what happens to those!) I mentioned that while I was working on Ascension Island I used to answer reception reports personally, but I am not sure if this will have any effect at Kranji!

Interesting smells coming from the kitchen announced that it was nearing lunch time for the staff, so we bade our farewells to our hosts and suggested we phone for a taxi. The manager said that taxi drivers would never find the place, so he very kindly drove us to Kranji MRT station. A fascinating visit, full of nostalgia for me, with grateful thanks to the very friendly staff who took time out to show us around.

Having now seen the Hong Kong and Kranji relays, I must now persuade my wife that we need to visit Thailand next!

73,  Richard   G3VGW

Yes, it was highly incompetent of you to the title your post with reference to the "controversial" explosives at Al  Qaaqaa, and now try to backpeddle furiously to cover the fact you were distorting the whole issue with phony "proof"-----just like your candidate.

Of course you're equally wrong about who was "moving the Army" (as if Bush makes the battle plan), but comapred to the first gaffe that's pretty minor.   I doubt he's an armchair general like those complaining about moving fast.

Household Survey Sees 100,000 Iraqi Deaths

By EMMA ROSS
AP Medical Writer
October 28, 2004

LONDON - A survey of deaths in Iraqi households estimates that as many as 100,000 more people may have died throughout the country in the 18 months after the U.S. invasion than would be expected based on the death rate before the war.

There is no official figure for the number of Iraqis killed since the conflict began, but some non-governmental estimates range from 10,000 to 30,000. As of Wednesday, 1,081 U.S. servicemen had been killed, according to the U.S. Defense Department.

The scientists who wrote the report concede that the data they based their projections on were of "limited precision," because the quality of the information depends on the accuracy of the household interviews used for the study. The interviewers were Iraqi, most of them doctors.

Designed and conducted by researchers at Johns Hopkins University, Columbia University and the Al-Mustansiriya University in Baghdad, the study is being published Thursday on the Web site of The Lancet medical journal.

The survey indicated violence accounted for most of the extra deaths seen since the invasion, and air strikes from coalition forces caused most of the violent deaths, the researchers wrote in the British-based journal.

"Most individuals reportedly killed by coalition forces were women and children," they said.

The report was released just days before the U.S. presidential election, and the lead researcher said he wanted it that way. The Lancet routinely publishes papers on the Web before they appear in print, particularly if it considers the findings of urgent public health interest.

Those reports then appear later in the print issue of the journal. The journal's spokesmen said they were uncertain which print issue the Iraqi report would appear in and said it was too late to make Friday's issue, and possibly too late for the Nov. 5 edition.

Les Roberts, the lead researcher from Johns Hopkins, said the article's timing was up to him.

"I emailed it in on Sept. 30 under the condition that it came out before the election," Roberts told The Asocciated Press. "My motive in doing that was not to skew the election. My motive was that if this came out during the campaign, both candidates would be forced to pledge to protect civilian lives in Iraq (news - web sites).

"I was opposed to the war and I still think that the war was a bad idea, but I think that our science has transcended our perspectives," Roberts said. "As an American, I am really, really sorry to be reporting this."

Richard Peto, an expert on study methods who was not involved with the research, said the approach the scientists took is a reasonable one to investigate the Iraq death toll.

However, it's possible that they may have zoned in on hotspots that might not be representative of the death toll across Iraq, said Peto, a professor of medical statistics at Oxford University in England.

To conduct the survey, investigators visited 33 neighborhoods spread evenly across the country in September, randomly selecting clusters of 30 households to sample. Of the 988 households visited, 808, consisting of 7,868 people, agreed to participate in the survey. At each one they asked how many people lived in the home and how many births and deaths there had been since January 2002.

The scientists then compared death rates in the 15 months before the invasion with those that occurred during the 18 months after the attack and adjusted those numbers to account for the different time periods.

Even though the sample size appears small, this type of survey is considered accurate and acceptable by scientists and was used to calculate war deaths in Kosovo in the late 1990s.

The investigators worked in teams of three. Five of the six Iraqi interviewers were doctors and all six were fluent in English and Arabic.

In the households reporting deaths, the person who died had to be living there at the time of the death and for more than two months before to be counted. In an attempt at firmer confirmation, the interviewers asked for death certificates in 78 households and were provided them 63 times.

There were 46 deaths in the surveyed households before the war. After the invasion, there were 142 deaths. That is an increase from 5 deaths per 1,000 people per year to 12.3 per 1,000 people per year - more than double.

However, more than a third of the post-invasion deaths were reported in one cluster of households in the city Falluja, where fighting has been most intense recently. Because the fighting was so severe there, the numbers from that location may have exaggerated the overall picture.

When the researchers recalculated the effect of the war without the statistics from Falluja, the deaths end up at 7.9 per 1,000 people per year - still 1.5 times higher than before the war.

Even with Falluja factored out, the survey "indicates that the death toll associated with the invasion and occupation of Iraq is more likely than not about 100,000 people, and may be much higher," the report said.

The most common causes of death before the invasion of Iraq were heart attacks, strokes and other chronic diseases. However, after the invasion, violence was recorded as the primary cause of death and was mainly attributed to coalition forces - with about 95 percent of those deaths caused by bombs or fire from helicopter gunships.

Violent deaths - defined as those brought about by the intentional act of others - were reported in 15 of the 33 clusters. The chances of a violent death were 58 times higher after the invasion than before it, the researchers said.

Twelve of the 73 violent deaths were not attributed to coalition forces. The researchers said 28 children were killed by coalition forces in the survey households. Infant mortality rose from 29 deaths per 1,000 live births before the war to 57 deaths per 1,000 afterward.

The researchers estimated the nationwide death toll due to the conflict by multiplying the difference between the two death rates by the estimated population of Iraq - 24.4 million at the start of the war. The result was then multiplied by 18 months, the average period between the invasion and the survey interviews.

"We estimate that there were 98,000 extra deaths during the postwar period in the 97 percent of Iraq represented by all the clusters except Falluja," the researchers said in the journal.

"This isn't about individual soldiers doing bad things. This appears to be a problem with the approach to occupation in Iraq," Roberts said.

The researchers called for further confirmation by an independent body such as the International Committee of the Red Cross, or the World Health Organization (news - web sites).

The study was funded by the Center for International Emergency Disaster and Refugee Studies at Johns Hopkins University and by the Small Arms Survey in Geneva, Switzerland, a research project based at the Graduate Institute of International Studies in Geneva.

Household Survey gives New Meaning to BS

By Pixonik
R.R.S. Medical Writer
October 28, 2004

LONDON - A survey of deaths in Iraqi households wasted a whole bunch of time and money by coming up with numbers that even the people conducting the survey say are worthless.

The scientists who wrote the report concede that the data they based their projections on were of "limited precision," because the quality of the information depends on the accuracy of the household interviews used for the study. The interviewers were Iraqi, most of them doctors.

Scientists also indicate that they hope the biased American press and loony liberals will pick up the story and fill in the blanks to make it look like the numbers are real. They were unwilling to comment on how many of the Iraqi dead were the result of constant terrorist attacks by those butchering their own people.

I started monitoring 11.175 at 14:50z and heard a message of 217 characters, (the longest message I've ever heard--previous longest was about 120). This message was heard on this frequency only. During the repeat message, Offutt came up with other message traffic. This message was heard on 5 frequencies. This is unusual. I had never heard two different EAMs go out on 11.175 at the same time. I have heard the same message slightly delayed (receiving 2 stations). After their first message, Offutt came up with a Sky King call.

Back to the first: shortly after, a message of 48 characters was heard, after which the party signed off. He had ID'd himself as 'bee bread'. He then said, "Bee Bread standing by for traffic". No response.

Both Bee Bread and Offutt have continued to rebroadcast those 2 messages over and over.  I have heard messages repeated but not like this.

After Bee Bread's signoff, he stood by for traffic.  After a pause I heard him say, 5 Romeo Alpha, I have you Lima Charlie.  Short pause, then signoff. Must be working duplex as nothng was heard from 5RA.

16:25z, Offutt broadcast a Sky King call.

Ok.  Thanks to all for the replies.  I'll tune it in again tonight (if I get woken up by another thunderstorm).

I guess I'm used to the standard phonetic alphabet and his use of other words threw me off a bit.  That and I was very much not all the way awake.

Anyway,
73's everyone.

Not everyone uses the 'standard' phonetic alphabet. I would have used Kilo 7 Romeo Lima. But each to his own.

My own callsign would be November 8 Kilo Delta Victor.

Showing yourself to be a clueless 'tard again. Doesn't that get just a little old after a while?

I saw the interview, and King never challenged any of the insane (or senile) things Cronkite said. He turned the show into a love fest of idiots.

No damage ....... unless it's hooked up to your radio when lightning hits it. If you don't have an external shortwave antenna you may notice some improvement over your current situation - though it is hardly what I'd call a "prime choice" for shortwave.

My advice would be to give it a shot.
I've used old 300 ohm downlead wire (which was just sort of "hanging" from a 70 - foot tower), fed into my old Yaesu FRG-7 with excellent results!

I know. This weather is crazy. I got up to go to work yesterday and didn't need a coat. I think it was 66 degrees out at 5:00 AM.

Remember that the antenna is horizontally polarized. If you get good results then leave it be. If you want better reception then turn the antenna 90 degrees for vertical polarization which is what all commercial vhf and up communications is.

Good Luck

Yesterday it was 73, but today the winds came and now at 54. At around 6 pm it was still 74 over near Detroit, but started falling quickly.

Get used to it again!

It helps if you understand the left seems to think Karl Rove is actually
"Dr. Evil" from the Austin Powers movies.

That's more what I'm familiar with.  I guess beause I fly I'm more used to the 'standard' as well.

Anyway, I enjoy having one of my SWR's on the bedside table.

If I can't sleep or if I'm woken up I slap in the earplug (can't disturbe the wife ya' know) flop an arm over and find and operate all the buttons and knobs by feel alone in the dark.  Get in some good listening that way.

I was at a local watering hole, sort of Union and contractor type of place. The OBL tape was being replayed on the TV.  "That mother fucker again?"  Said the flannel shirted man beside me.  "I thought we got rid of him.  Shit.  We need a Nam vet in there now to kill this son of a bitch."

This guy ain't your regular Dem. voter.  But he's pissed.  His friend even said: "Bush will take of him."  To which he was interrupted: "Bullshit.  He's had three god damned years."

And you did what to try and get him?

Things will happen in good time. We did not get Adolph in a few weeks or a few years.

Most of you 'tard boys try to live your lives in the space of a sound bite.

Perhaps you'll die that way too, and that may be the way you are remembered .

Oh you are sooo right. I have seen the light. Bush should have jumped up and yelled to all the 4 year olds "RUN FOR YOUR LIVES, YOUR MOMMIES CAN'T SAVE YOU NOW." Why didn't I realize that before.

Here is the slop JL wrote on his website. If anyone cares to vomit, they are welcome to read it.

Pirate James
This post is my attempt to lay to rest, any and all controversy regarding Big Steve Coles exit from my program and WBCQ.

As you may know, Big Steve has had numerous problems with WBCQ management over the years. I do not intend to interject any editorial comments regarding the validity of his or managements disagreements. If I have learned anything in the 17 years since I turned my 1.5 watt FM transmitter on and began my radio career, it is that there is invariably a little right and wrong on each side. That is as much comment as is required.

I was seriously disappointed with the Big Guys inability to walk away cleanly from his association with WBCQ. The web posting circulated by him late last week, was uncalled for. It was unduly harsh and mean spirited. Regardless of his problems with the station, I did not believe his caustic critique was called for, and I felt it showed disrespect to the very people who enabled him to remain a viable short-wave broadcaster, despite differences that would have made most station managers drop the program and the concomitant ajita.

I want it to be known that without a doubt station management and staff was obviously annoyed by Steves attempt to anger them. Indeed they were more disappointed in him than angry. Particularly as I have assured them on many occasions in the past that he was not a bad guy out to do them harm. His retirement letter proved otherwise, not to mention, made me look like a liar.

At no time did anyone in WBCQ management state or infer that I should dump the Big Guy. I do know that enough consternation was caused that such a situation almost occurred. Yet, management resisted doing so, going so far as to tell me that if I felt he should remain a part of 11L-RNI that would be fine and no recriminations against myself or the show would result from such a decision.

I however felt, that considering his rage and his severe criticism, criticism that could turn prospective clients away from buying time on The Planet, and the fact that he has tried to hurt the very people who have enabled me to serve you on the cheap, as in virtually FREE for the past six plus years, some action had to be taken.

I considered just telling the Big Guy he was finished, in effect firing him from his non-paying, not all that sweet gig with our show. The Big Guy, spared me doing so, by walking away of his own volition. He believed this would spare me pressure from the station. If I lead him to think that was the case, I was wrong, and that was not my intention. Frankly, there was no pressure, but I came to conclude that he no longer belonged on WBCQ, or as part of a show aired by WBCQ due to his ongoing disdain for station management.

Keeping Steve on board would have been dissing the people who have allowed me to skewer them and keep Radio NewYork International alive for so many years. Therefore, I believe my actions were correct and I do stand by them.

Regarding other postings that you may have read or heard of, the Big Guy will not be present in the studio during any shows, nor will he assist in its production or execution on any level. He will not be a part of my on air operation at all. A clean break is what is required and that is what I want.

The Big Guy is a friend, albeit one who has done wrong by me and WBCQ and I believe he realizes this. He knows I am deeply distressed by his actions and was not at all pleased. His ban from the proceedings should serve as ample proof of my disgust. He has pledged to do right by me, by pulling all incendiary postings, and has agreed to walk away without further sullying the situation or making problems for 11L-RNI with postings or comments that are just plain unnecessary. I expect this to be the case.

I can tolerate no further diversions caused by someone with a mega chip on his shoulder as it certainly does not inure to the benefit of my program or my ability to relate to and work with, my staff and the staff and management of WBCQ.

Let me close by reiterating, no pressure was brought upon me to relieve him of his duties. It was a mutual agreement. It was respectful of WBCQs management on my part, and respectful of my feelings on his part to end our on the air association as we have. I expect and will tolerate no further acrimony or activities that keeps me from focusing on what is important...the show and making it the best show I can present for your enjoyment.

Those of you on the receiving end of our signal, have little idea of the ongoing stress and pain, that management related and interpersonal staff problems have caused me since I was a pirate. I try to do what I believe is right as I see it...often however, I do fail. I misjudge, even choose the wrong side. Often, in trying to keep all parties happy, I have managed to do right by no one.

On occasion, my decisions and how I handle such problems as that imposed upon me by Steve have come at a cost to the quality of the show. Perhaps it is time I consider the show first and foremost and let those chips fall, regardless of who gets hurt. If that cannot be, believe me, I will walk, no, run away from this gig before I continue to have my mission to entertain and inform waylaid by what should be sidebar issues that you, our valued listeners, should never need to know of.

Any additional discussion of this issue by me would be a waste of my time. I will not address this subject again on the air, and will make anyone who tires to persona non grata.

Your comments would be appreciated, but Id prefer to have to not answer any additional questions regarding this matter. It is now past history that I hope all concerned especially yours truly, have learned something from.

Thank you for your time and attention to this posting.

This is one of the reasons we need a voter test before these frickin 'tard boys ever get a chance to drop their Cheeto's and cast a vote.

Oh you are sooo right. I have seen the light. Bush should have jumped up and yelled to all the 4 year olds "RUN FOR YOUR LIVES, YOUR MOMMIES CAN'T SAVE

Then they're not "open".  And adding another signal, even a low power one, in this space would then interfere with the otherwise serviceable coverage closer in to these stations.

That doesn't make the area unserved by WRLL's nighttime pattern "open".  A facility allowed to fill in this "unserved" area would interfere with the stations whose skywaves come in from all over.  And the FCC no longer licenses daytimers, and all attempts to apply for one will be rejected on this criteria.  As it is, the FCC is looking for daytimers below 1600 (and encourages, through policies in place) to move

to the X-band, in order to clear out the congestion and permit more regional service by the full-time stations on those frequencies.

Actually, no. The interference standards provide for usable coverages to the limits of receivers (very few radios will provide a listenable output at 500uV, the current protection limit for nighttime service, which affords a 26dB signal to noise ratio, give-or-take). But protecting out to that limit means that for every 20dB increase in signal strength for the desired station (by moving closer to the transmitter) also means at least a 20dB boost in the signal to noise ratio...thus, the rural-grade 5mV/m contour would be a listenable signal. Allowing increased interference (by raising the protected contour to, say, 2mV/m) means that a listenable signal would be obtained at the 20mVm contour....which is a metro-grade signal-strength. So, in the interest of expanding coverage, you'd actually be reducing it. For both the new, as well as the existing, stations.

All the details about how this is done can be found at http://kauko.hallikainen.org/FCC/FccRules/2003/73/182/ and http://kauko.hallikainen.org/FCC/FccRules/2003/73/37/

>> IMHO the FCC has grounds to regulate both services on content if they

Maybe so....but, for the former proposal, would you want a situation where the FCC can delve into the private affairs of these operations? You know, the next step would be censoring telephone conversations, as the analogy holds. Subscription services, and other non-broadcasting licensees, are not public entities. Better that if the FCC feels obliged to limit what can be said on OTA, they feel that it's the only area where such pervue exists. While I'm not so keen to remove those restrictions on OTA, the Canadians and other democracies have no such limits (although there's some discretion in how often the ability to say anything is exploited) and they haven't come to the end of the world.

Latest BPL information from ARRL:

==>FCC BPL REPORT AND ORDER STRESSES INTERFERENCE AVOIDANCE, RESOLUTION

The FCC this week released the full BPL Report and Order (R&O) in ET Docket 04-37 that it adopted just two weeks ago. While extolling the purported benefits of broadband over power line technology, the 81-page document also declares the FCC's intention to protect licensed services from harmful interference.

"We recognize that some radio operations in the bands being used for Access BPL, such as those of Amateur Radio licensees, may occur at distances sufficiently close to power lines as to make harmful interference a possibility," the FCC conceded in its R&O. "We believe that those situations can be addressed through interference avoidance techniques by the Access BPL provider such as frequency band selection, notching, or judicious device placement."

Notches would have to be at least 20 dB below applicable Part 15 limits on HF, 10 dB below on VHF. The FCC called the ability to alter a system's operation to notch out transmissions on specific frequencies where interference is occurring "a necessary feature for resolving interference without disrupting service to BPL subscribers."

In line with remarks made at the October 14 open meeting where the FCC adopted the R&O--then still in draft form--the FCC declined to reduce the Part 15 radiated emission limit for BPL systems. It maintained that emissions from BPL systems are very localized and at low enough levels to generally preclude harmful interference.

The FCC said it had no evidence before it that BPL operation would significantly contribute to generally raising background noise levels. At the same time, it seemed to put some of the onus on Amateur Radio licensees to take steps to avoid power-line interference--and, by inference, BPL interference--in advance.

"In addition, because power lines inherently can radiate significant noise emissions as noted by NTIA and ARRL, good engineering practice is to locate sensitive receiver antennas as far as practicable from power lines," the FCC said.

In a footnote, the FCC took pains to advise ARRL that in cases where its members experience RF noise, "such noise can often be avoided by carefully locating their antennas; in many instances an antenna relocation of only a relatively short distance can resolve noise interference."

BPL operators would be required to avoid certain bands, such as those used for life and safety communications by aeronautical mobile or US Coast Guard stations. The FCC R&O makes clear, however, that similar rules will not apply to the Amateur Service.

"We similarly do not find that Amateur Radio frequencies warrant the special protection afforded frequencies reserved for international aeronautical and maritime safety operations," the Commission said. "While we recognize that amateurs may on occasion assist in providing emergency communications," the FCC added. It described typical amateur operations as "routine communications and hobby activities."

Although some cases of harmful interference may be possible from BPL emissions at levels up to Part 15 limits, the FCC said, "we agree with NTIA [National Telecommunications and Information Administration] that the benefits of Access BPL service warrant acceptance of a small and manageable degree of interference risk." The Commission reiterated in the R&O its belief that BPL's public benefits "are sufficiently important and significant so as to outweigh the limited potential for increased harmful interference that may arise."

Among other specific provisions, the FCC's new rules mandate certification of BPL equipment instead of the less-stringent verification, a public BPL database--something the BPL industry did not want--and mechanisms to deal swiftly with interference complaints. BPL systems will have to incorporate the ability to modify operation and performance "to mitigate or avoid potential harmful interference" and to deactivate problematic units, the R&O says.

Further, the new rules spell out the locations of "small geographic exclusion zones" as well as excluded bands or frequencies--concessions made primarily at the insistence of the NTIA, which administers radio spectrum for federal government users--and "coordination areas" where BPL operators must "precoordinate" spectrum use. The rules also detail techniques to measure BPL emissions from system equipment and power lines.

The FCC said it expects "good faith" on both sides in the event of interference complaints. While the Commission said it expects BPL operators to take every interference complaint seriously and to diagnose the possible cause of interference quickly, it also suggested that complainants have responsibilities.

"At the same time, we expect the complainant to have first taken reasonable steps to confirm that interference, rather than a receiver system malfunction, is occurring and, to the extent practicable, to determine that the interference source is located outside the complainant's premises," the Commission said.

Shutting down a BPL system in response to a valid interference complaint "would be a last resort when all other efforts to satisfactorily reduce interference have failed," the FCC said.

League officials are studying the R&O and considering possible responses. The ARRL Executive Committee (EC) already has authorized filing a Petition for Reconsideration. The EC also authorized ARRL General Counsel Chris Imlay, W3KD, to "prepare to pursue other available remedies as to procedural and substantive defects" in the BPL proceeding.

For more information on BPL, visit the "Broadband Over Power Line (BPL) and Amateur Radio" page <http://www.arrl.org> on the ARRL Web site.

==>STATE UTILITIES COMMISSIONERS' BPL TASK FORCE SESSION YIELDS SOME INSIGHTS

ARRL Chief Technology Officer Paul Rinaldo, W4RI, represented the League this week at a meeting of the National Association of Regulatory Utilities Commissioners (NARUC) Broadband over Power Lines (BPL) Task Force. Michigan Commissioner Laura Chappelle chaired the October 24 gathering in Alexandria, Virginia. Its aim was to give NARUC BPL Task Force members an overview of federal regulations, an industry perspective, and insight into potential state regulatory issues related to BPL. NARUC consists of state utility regulators who have no jurisdiction over RFI issues, Rinaldo explained after the meeting.

"However," he said, "it's good that they are aware that there's a potential interference problem that could complicate life at the local level when hams complain to utilities about interference." On the other hand, he noted during his presentation, "BPL may be a distraction from a utility's main function of delivering reliable power to customers." During a question-and-answer session, the state utility commissioners posed no questions regarding BPL interference, Rinaldo said.

Rinaldo's presentation, "BPL--Amateur Radio Perspective," pointed out a paradox in the new regulations: "The R&O excludes frequency bands for those facilities typically away from BPL installations," he said. "However, it does not exclude frequency bands for those stations, such as Amateur Radio, typically closest to residential BPL installations." Rinaldo noted that ARRL and National Telecommunications and Information Administration (NTIA) BPL measurements "are consistent" with each other. The NTIA had determined that even at Part 15 emission limits for reception of low to moderate-strength signals, BPL interference extends out 460 meters (approximately 1509 feet) for fixed stations.

Among suggested BPL "best practices," Rinaldo recommended that BPL providers exclude Amateur Radio bands "by design" rather than awaiting complaints. If complaints do arise, BPL providers should "promptly eliminate interference," he said. Rinaldo also stressed Amateur Radio's emergency communication role.

Precursor Group CEO Scott Cleland spoke on "The Alchemy of Broadband over Power Lines." While focused primarily on investments, Cleland's presentation also asserted that that technical alchemy "has finally overcome the heretofore insurmountable barrier of noise interference in an economically viable way."

The United Power Line Council's Brett Kilbourne told the gathering that all technical problems confronting BPL had been solved and that it was time to roll it out. "I bit my tongue," Rinaldo remarked later.

During a discussion on "open access," Rinaldo said, the mood of the Commissioners was not to regulate how many BPL providers might have access to a given utility system, "which logically means that only one provider would be practical," he concluded. "That is, if one provider hogs all the bandwidth and/or time on the bands not notched, it would be virtually impossible to have the original provider back out just to let a competitor in."

Franca and Current Technologies' Jay Birnbaum allowed that there wasn't much bandwidth to begin with, and, Rinaldo said, subdividing it wouldn't make much sense.

Discussion also touched on the timing of BPL rollouts and competition from well-established cable and DSL as well as growing wireless system providers. "From the discussion, I got the impression that rollout would take about 4-1/2 years," Rinaldo said. "Over that time, cable, DSL, fiber, wireless and satellite broadband providers will provide strong competition."

There really is no "best"..... it all depends on the particular situation and usage at the time.  Generally mobile units have more power, better range and longer lasting power sources (car battery).... but you are tied to a vehicle or must lug a heavy high amp hour battery around...so they are not nearly as mobile.

A portable has limited power but this often isn't a factor unless you are far from a repeater.  The beauty of a portable is it's ability to pretty much go anywhere.

In short you can do things with a mobile you can't acccomplish as surely with a portable.... but under certain circumstances the reverse is also true.  I'd have both.

Both.  You will want one in your vehicle and one in your "go bag" that is fully charged and hopefully has a battery pack that takes "AA" cells of which you will also keep with the radio.  Pre-program both units to the frequencies you use in your area and also keep a 'cheat sheet' with same just in case.

Also -and this is a BIG also -  prior to the emergency you should become a part of the organized response team whether ARES or RACES. If you haven't trained with your peers and the agency(ies) you will be serving your utility as a 'team member' will be little in terms of on-air support. In fact, in regard to RACES if you are not already part of the RACES organization you will not even be acknowledged once RACES Rules are instituted during a disaster and your trying to communicate with them will impair their ability to carry out their mission.  However, there are many 'off-air' things that need to be tended to such as rounding up the trained members, handling logistics (emergency responders need water, food, rest accomodations etc). You also need to understand their organizational structure and emergency call-up procedures, this is necessary to be effective for both on-air and off-air support.

Not trying to rain on your parade, but emergency comm's is more than just buying a radio and expecting it to be useful during "the big one" (whatever your area's 'big one' may be).

mentioning wolfowitz makes my neocon heart skip a beat.

damn, that cocksucker is my neocon poster boy, my neocon idol.

i worship the ground this neocon walks on. i mean he's so fucking far right, only a few chosen ones, like atilla the hun, hitler, and other honored neocons from the past have been there.

thanks, and thanks again.

oh, and don't worry about the draft, it's only your sons and daughters that will be sacrificed for the neocons' wet dreams. nothing to worry about. you didn't want any grandchildren anyway.

Cronkite has been around long enough to recognize the dirty tricks of a presidential election and Rove is about as evil as they come in politics these days. You guys better start taking your medication so you can handle the truth next week.

Stop giving mongoloids a bad name. They want nothing to do with this repetitive, abusive, and syphilitic stroke victim.

As for Cronkite, I remember being a kid and getting up really early to watch the rocket launches from Cape Canaveral. On one occasion there was a delay and Cronkite just about cried. His eyes were wet with disappointment. You could feel his sadness.

The man is part of United States history and to have the local yokels calling him idiot shows more about them than anything Cronkite has or will ever do.

His coverage of John Glenn's return to space was excellent. The man is a living tribute to journalism. Only real haters of the American way of life would insult him with this petty and moronic name calling.

During that 7 minutes, the Secrete Service was trying to gather facts about what had happened and was making the decision as to where the President should go.

You know what the idiot Kerry was doing all that time?

Here's what the Massachusetts Democrat said July 8 when Larry King asked where he was on 9/11, according to CNN's own transcript:

'Nobody Could Think'

"I was in the Capitol. We'd just had a meeting - we'd just come into a leadership meeting in Tom Daschle's office, looking out at the Capitol. And as I came in, Barbara Boxer and Harry Reid were standing there, and we watched the second plane come in to the building. And we shortly thereafter sat down at the table and then we just realized nobody could think, and then boom, right behind us, we saw the cloud of explosion at the Pentagon. And then word came from the White House, they were evacuating, and we were to evacuate, and so we immediately began the evacuation."

"the second plane hit the World Trade Center at 9:03 a.m., and the plane hit the Pentagon at 9:43 a.m. By Kerry's own words, he and his fellow senators sat there for forty minutes, realizing 'nobody could think.'"

So for forty minutes, Kerry sat there, unable to think. Now imagine him as President, sitting there dumbfounded unable to think...FOR FORTY MINUTES.

This is against the law to coerce people to vote some way around a polling place. These people should be reported to the elections division where they will be sanctioned in future elections.

But 52% over 47% is, which is the margin by which President Bush trounced the inept (and disgusting) John Forbes Kerry.

You're right, ronin.  I should have voted for a guy that sat on

I did listen, but unfortunately missed the first 10 minutes or so. Frank is no die hard Bush supporter, but he is a die hard Kerry hater, so he was in pretty good form. I think he was just as pleased at the house and senate seats won by the repubs. Especially Daschle looooooosing. I hope Daschle ends up selling used cars, he'd be good at that.

52-47, little ricky...

Clinton never broke 50%

In fact, NO democrat has broken 50% since 1976.

Tell you want, you keep up the childish tantrums, we'll keep settin' the agenda...

Dig?

Between kill filing Julie, Mike Terry and a few other choice individuals the news group went from 159 to 48 posts. Looking good.

My guess is that she is late 40's or early 50's, grossly overweight and hasn't been in a relationship for 10 years. It certainly would explain a few things ;-).

Top 10 to you. I do hope that the people at verizon are listening.

Good DX

Unlike yesterday I'm getting great reception on the upper bands today.

If a transmission is directed here it sounds like a local BCB station today no DRM needed.

This is against the law to coerce people to vote some way around a polling place. These people should be reported to the elections division where they will be sanctioned in future elections.

 Telamon

No, it is not against the law at all. Electioneering is prohibited within a certain number of feet of the actual polls.

I REALLY am sorry to contribute to the perpetuation of a horseshit thread, but I have to say that the link in this post sent me to one of the most ignorant, illiterate and addle-brained sites I've ever seen.
I am not even a Republican, but my God! This site is incredibly poorly done.
If you believe this crap, you'll believe anything.
The amount of skewing of facts and figures and stats online, and on MUCH of SW, on all sides of the political fence is really mind-blowing. It wasn't rigged, it wasn't a sweep, it wasn't anything else. It is just a part of being an American, supporting what you feel is right, and fighting what you feel is not.
Why do you extremists (on either end) have to make everything a thousand times more complex and muddled by raving about inane (and wholly untrue) subjects like this one? The struggle for balance, justice and peace on a daily basis is tough enough for any citizen worth the name. This crap just makes it that much closer to impossible to get anything decent done.
Sorry for the OT contribution. Now back to SW.
Linus

Which of course was a much higher percentage of Americans than who voted for Kerry.

Bush won. Gore lost. Kerry lost. Daschle lost. Dems lost the House. Dems lost the Senate. Ahnold calls them "losers", and he's right. Get over it.

No it isn't.  Bush got in on the slimmest margin since Wilson.  You can spin it until your fascist head flies off and it won't change a thing.

No.  That's fascism.  This isn't a fascist state quite yet...although you and your idiot king can keep trying.  In a republic we don't HAVE to START LIKING ANYONE.  In the American republic, we have a little thing called dissent.  It's not the running off out of the light of a newsgroup that cockroaches like Billy Beck and Wayne Mann did, only to come back when your team is on top.  It's day by day criticism.  So I tell you what, fascist...YOU START LIKING YOUR POLICE STATE.  I'll keep denouncing it.

[ tripe snipped ]

You Republicans do love to lie, don't you? And this is an old lie, long debunked.

From <http://www.snopes.com/inboxer/outrage/panthers.htm>:

Claim: Hillary Clinton played a significant role in defending Black Panthers accused of torturing and murdering Alex Rackley.

Status: False.

Example: [Collected on the Internet, 1999] (example redacted -- tb)

Origins: It's difficult for those who weren't around to experience the 1960s first-hand to fully understand the controversy that swirled around "radical" parties such as the Black Panthers. Certainly to many Americans they represented the very worst of that era's political movements: a group of hate-filled militants who felt their disaffection with the existing social and political systems justified anything required to achieve their aim of "revolution by any means necessary" (such as smuggling guns into a Marin County courtroom in an attempt to free Panther George Jackson, resulting in a shoot-out that killed a judge, two inmates, and Jackson's brother). To others, however, they were the only political group that truly represented a downtrodden and marginalized group of people who had been enslaved, discriminated against, and denied civil rights protections for hundreds of years; that sought to improve the condition of the poor by operating schools, opening medical clinics, and providing free breakfasts for ghetto children; and that had the courage to stand up to the brutality visited upon them by law enforcement acting in the service of a government and a society that sought to "keep them in their place."

In May of 1969, Black Panther founder and national chairman Bobby Seale (who had already been indicted for his alleged participation in demonstrations at the Democratic National Convention in Chicago in August 1968) made a trip from Oakland to New Haven, Connecticut, to speak at Yale University. The Black Panthers were by then nationally known, a focus of media attention, and under the active surveillance of the FBI. (J. Edgar Hoover had publicly declared several months earlier that he considered the Panthers "the greatest threat to the internal security of the country.") Rumors of police informants and government spies having infiltrated the party were rampant, and a man named Alex Rackley, a member of the Panthers' New York chapter, fell under suspicion. Rackley was taken to the home of Warren Kimbro (a "community organizer and aspiring Panther") where he was held captive for 24 hours, beaten, and scalded with boiling water in an effort to force him to confess. Rackley was then taken to a marsh in Middlefield by Kimbro, George Sams (Panther field marshall and, according to some, himself a police informant), and Lonnie McLucas (a Panther member from Bridgeport), where Sams ordered Kimbro and McLucas to kill the suspected informant. (Who did the actual killing has always been disputed; McLucas reportedly fired the first shot, but Kimbro admittedly delivered the bullet to the head that killed Rackley.) Rackley's body was discovered the next day by fishermen, and fourteen Black Panthers were arrested and charged with murder, kidnapping, and conspiracy.

That several Black Panthers directly took part in the torture and murder of Alex Rackey is beyond dispute, and to those of us who believe that torture and murder are always wrong, no matter what the cause, their actions were morally reprehensible. But this piece isn't really about outrage over what the Black Panthers did thirty years ago; it's a political tract whose purpose is to discredit the Clintons by associating them with the Black Panthers. Of the hundreds of people who played part in the Black Panthers' New Haven trial three decades ago, the only ones named here are Hillary Clinton (currently our First Lady and a candidate for a U.S. Senate seat in New York), and Bill Lann Lee (acting head of the Justice Department's civil rights division, whose appointment by President Clinton remains controversial because of Lee's support for affirmative action programs).

So, exactly what connection do Ms. Clinton and Mr. Lee have to the Black Panthers? The piece quoted above claims:

> How in the world do you think that these killers got off so easy? Well, maybe it was in some part due to the efforts of two people who came to the defense of the Panthers. These two people actually went so far as to shut down Yale University with demonstrations in defense of the accused Black Panthers during their trial.

We'll begin with the last part, and it's simply ludicrous. Yale University was not "shut down" during the trial. Classes were made optional when 12,000 Panther supporters swarmed the campus in protest, and the president of Yale University himself, Kingman Brewster Jr., announced: "I personally want to say that I'm appalled and ashamed that things should have come to such a pass that I am skeptical of the ability of Black revolutionaries to achieve a fair trial anywhere in the U.S." To lay the entire responsibility for this massive, widespread protest on the shoulders of two Yale students is just silly, all the more so because nobody has offered evidence that either one of them led, or even participated in, any student demonstrations or protests in support of the Black Panthers. Nevertheless, even if they didn't actually lead or take part in any demonstrations they're still guilty by association, we're told, because they "defended" the Black Panthers.

One of the elements often employed in political screeds such as this one is the ambiguity of the word "defend." It can be used in the sense of providing legal aid to a person accused of a crime, or in the sense of supplying moral justification for a person's actions. Sometimes these two concepts go hand in hand; but often they don't. We often find it necessary, in order to preserve and protect our rights, to defend (in a legal sense) those whose actions we consider morally wrong, and to defend (in a moral sense) those who actions we find legally wrong. We sometimes let criminals go free because constitutional safeguards were violated in the process of bringing them to justice. That doesn't mean we condone their crimes; it means we're willing to "defend" their rights in order to preserve a higher moral principle (i.e., the rights that protect all of us).

What has been overlooked (or deliberately ignored) in the piece quoted here is that even though fourteen Black Panthers were arrested and charged with murder, kidnapping, and conspiracy in connection with the murder of Alex Rackley, only two of them were put on trial (the others plead to lesser charges, or the charges against them were dropped): Bobby Seale and Erika Huggins. Why only these two? Seale wasn't present at either the torture or murder of Alex Rackley; he maintained that he knew nothing about any plans to kill Rackley and wasn't even aware that Rackley was suspected of being a police informant. (Panther George Sams did claim he had told Seale about suspicions Rackley was an informant, however.) Erika Huggins wasn't present when Rackley was killed, either. She was accused of having taken part in the "interrogation" of Rackley, boiling the water used to scald him and kicking him while he was tied to a chair. Certainly her actions were both criminally wrong and morally reprehensible, but several other Panthers took a far more active hand in the torture and murder of Rackley (such as those who actually poured the boiling water onto him, beat him, and shot him in the head). Why were only these two people put on trial while the other Panthers were allowed to plead out or weren't even prosecuted at all?

Many people genuinely believed, at the time, that the government was deliberately prosecuting for murder people whom it knew full well were not guilty of murder in order to discredit a group it perceived as a threat, and that perhaps the government had deliberately sacrificed Rackley by planting him in the Panthers' midst and then leaking his cover in order to provoke a showdown. (The fact that neither of the accused was ever convicted is taken by some as proof of the correctness of this theory; others dismiss it as irrelevant and maintain that the case was far too politically controversial to allow for a fair verdict.) If Bobby Seale, the head of the Black Panther party, could be convicted and sent to prison for murder, the Black Panthers would lose a great deal of public support and credibility and be disarmed as a threat to the government. This, it was widely held, was the government's real motivation for prosecuting only Seale and Huggins while other Panthers who were more directly involved in Rackley's murder went free or were allowed to plead to lesser charges (in exchange for turning state's evidence against Seale and Huggins).

The key point here is not whether this notion was ultimately right or wrong. The key point is that many people believed it to be true at the time, and they therefore "supported" the Black Panthers during the subsequent trial (in a legal sense) - not necessarily because they condoned the (alleged) actions of the two people on trial (or the Black Panthers in general), but because they felt it was morally wrong for the government to prosecute murder charges against only two people, neither of whom was directly involved in the murder of Alex Rackley, all for political purposes. So, one cannot simply tar everyone who "defended" the Panthers with the same brush of moral outrage; many found the Panthers and their actions odious but still "defended" them because they honestly believed the government's attempts to prosecute only a select two of questionable guilt (while letting confessed torturers and murderers off with a comparative slap on the wrist) to be the far greater injustice.

So, what exactly did Mr. Lee and Ms. Clinton do to "defend" the Panthers in a legal sense? In Mr. Lee's case, he did absolutely nothing. He wasn't a lawyer, or even a law student; he was simply another Yale undergraduate who had nothing to do with the Black Panthers' trial. Ms. Clinton wasn't a lawyer then, either; she was a Yale law student. The sum total of her involvement in the trial was that she assisted the American Civil Liberties Union in monitoring the trial for civil rights violations. That a law student's tangential participation in one of the most controversial, politically and racially charged trials of her time (one that took place right on her doorstep) to help ensure it remained free of civil rights abuses is now offered as "proof" of her moral reprehensibility demonstrates that McCarthyism is alive and well - some of us apparently believe in rights but don't believe everyone has the right to have rights.

Of course, neither Mr. Lee nor Ms. Clinton had anything to do with "defending" the other twelve Panthers, who never even stood trial because the government declined to prosecute them or allowed them to turn state's evidence. The flimsy "evidence" typically mustered as "proof" of their "support" for the Black Panthers is that Hillary Clinton was co-editor of the Yale Review when it printed a derogatory cartoon depicting police as decapitated pigs, even though no one has demonstrated that she approved (or even knew) of it, and that in order to join a student group, Bill Lee once "acquiesced when pressed to write a statement expressing solidarity with the Panthers who were on trial." (If Mr. Lee was such a wholehearted supporter of the Panthers, one has to wonder why he had to be "pressed" into making such a statement.)

In a woefully bad piece of "journalism," Insight magazine writer John Elvin tried his best, despite his lack of any real evidence, to huff and puff and assert as true the claim that Hillary Rodham was leading campus protests in support of the Black Panthers. His conclusion was a model of disingenuousness:

> Can there be any doubt, based on the foregoing facts, that Rodham and Lee indeed were student leaders during the Panther protests at Yale? The correct answer is no.

Sure, the answer is "no," because the wrong question has been asked. That Hillary Rodman could fairly have been described as a "student leader" is something no one would dispute. The question being asked here is "Was Hillary Clinton leading campus protests in support of the Black Panthers?" -- a question Elvin dishonestly avoids answering because he can't demonstrate the answer to be "yes." The "foregoing facts" he refers to can be summarized thusly:

* The person who started this rumor says it's true.

* Hillary Rodham associated with people I don't like.

* A bunch of books I don't name say she was a campus activist.

The first two items have no probative value, and the third is carefully worded to conceal the fact that the writer is really stating nothing more than an obvious point no one would dispute, while trying hard to create the misleading impression the point that he can't prove (i.e., that Hillary Rodham actually led campus protests in support of the Black Panthers) is true:

> Insight reviewed biographies of Hillary Clinton by Milton, Brock and Roger Morris for this story and lengthy selections from such other biographies as Barbara Olson's Hell to Pay. Together, relying on primary and other firsthand sources, they unquestionably back Horowitz's contention that Hillary was a campus leader during the Panther protests. She was, by standards of those chaotic and violent times, a moderate voice compared with such fanatics as Yippie leader Jerry Rubin, who exhorted Yale students to "kill your parents," but she played a prominent activist role.

Yes, Hillary Rodham was a "campus leader" and played an "activist role" in her university days. So what? The same could be said of thousands of other people who protested the Vietnam War, or campaigned to get 18-year-olds the vote, or supported equal rights for women. None of that demonstrates anything about Hillary Rodham's alleged support of the Black Panthers. Elvin himself admits that she was "a moderate voice," and it's significant that he doesn't quote from, synopsize, or even identify by title any of the "reviewed biographies" he alludes to, because none of them supports the impression he's trying to create. Not a single one of these biographies quotes anyone who actually saw Hillary Rodham taking part in campus protests for the Panthers, but nearly all of them quote people who knew her back then as saying that radical protest politics simply weren't her style, and that she preferred getting two sides together for reconciliation rather than confrontation. For example, in The Seduction of Hillary Rodham Clinton by David Brock, we find:

> By the end of her first year at Yale, it was clear that Hillary abjured the in-your-face political tactics of Jerry Rubin as well as the exhibitionistic and hedonistic side of the 1960s. She was practical, pragmatic, and mainstream in her strategies, tactics, and presentation.

Stripped of all the invective and blatant political ranting, the case here against Mr. Lee and Ms. Clinton comes down to nothing more than "We don't like their politics" and "They were there," so they must be as morally guilty as the Panthers themselves. As a junior senator from Wisconsin once demonstrated, if you can't defeat your political opponents at the ballot box, and you can't point to anything specific they've done wrong, simply declare them guilty for once having been associated (no matter how tenuous the association) with a group now reviled. "Vilification by association" tactics that worked for McCarthyites in the 1950s apparently still have their adherents today.

Scream, America, when you've had enough.

Update: Versions of the e-mailed denunciation headed "Paul Harvey's 'The rest of the story'" began circulating on the Internet in June 2000. This header plus a comment at the end of the text ("And now, as Paul Harvey says, you know the rest of the story") caused some to believe Paul Harvey had read this piece (or a shorter version of it) on air. Paul Harvey's people confirm he has never broadcast the Panthers and Hillary Clinton story.

Why were only these two people put on trial while the other Panthers were allowed to plead out or weren't even prosecuted at all?

Many people genuinely believed, at the time, that the government was deliberately prosecuting for murder people whom it knew full well were not guilty of murder in order to discredit a group it perceived as a threat, and that perhaps the government had deliberately sacrificed Rackley by planting him in the Panthers' midst and then leaking his cover in order to provoke a showdown. (The fact that neither of the accused was ever convicted is taken by some as proof of the correctness of this theory; others dismiss it as irrelevant and maintain that the case was far too politically controversial to allow for a fair verdict.) If Bobby Seale, the head of the Black Panther party, could be convicted and sent to prison for murder, the Black Panthers would lose a great deal of public support and credibility and be disarmed as a threat to the government. This, it was widely held, was the government's real motivation for prosecuting only Seale and Huggins while other Panthers who were more directly involved in Rackley's murder went free or were allowed to plead to lesser charges (in exchange for turning state's evidence against Seale and Huggins).

The key point here is not whether this notion was ultimately right or wrong. The key point is that many people believed it to be true at the time, and they therefore "supported" the Black Panthers during the subsequent trial (in a legal sense) - not necessarily because they condoned the (alleged) actions of the two people on trial (or the Black Panthers in general), but because they felt it was morally wrong for the government to prosecute murder charges against only two people, neither of whom was directly involved in the murder of Alex Rackley, all for political purposes. So, one cannot simply tar everyone who "defended" the Panthers with the same brush of moral outrage; many found the Panthers and their actions odious but still "defended" them because they honestly believed the government's attempts to prosecute only a select two of questionable guilt (while letting confessed torturers and murderers off with a comparative slap on the wrist) to be the far greater injustice.

So, what exactly did Mr. Lee and Ms. Clinton do to "defend" the Panthers in a legal sense? In Mr. Lee's case, he did absolutely nothing. He wasn't a lawyer, or even a law student; he was simply another Yale undergraduate who had nothing to do with the Black Panthers' trial. Ms. Clinton wasn't a lawyer then, either; she was a Yale law student. The sum total of her involvement in the trial was that she assisted the American Civil Liberties Union in monitoring the trial for civil rights violations. That a law student's tangential participation in one of the most controversial, politically and racially charged trials of her time (one that took place right on her doorstep) to help ensure it remained free of civil rights abuses is now offered as "proof" of her moral reprehensibility demonstrates that McCarthyism is alive and well - some of us apparently believe in rights but don't believe everyone has the right to have rights.

Of course, neither Mr. Lee nor Ms. Clinton had anything to do with "defending" the other twelve Panthers, who never even stood trial because the government declined to prosecute them or allowed them to turn state's evidence. The flimsy "evidence" typically mustered as "proof" of their "support" for the Black Panthers is that Hillary Clinton was co-editor of the Yale Review when it printed a derogatory cartoon depicting police as decapitated pigs, even though no one has demonstrated that she approved (or even knew) of it, and that in order to join a student group, Bill Lee once "acquiesced when pressed to write a statement expressing solidarity with the Panthers who were on trial." (If Mr. Lee was such a wholehearted supporter of the Panthers, one has to wonder why he had to be "pressed" into making such a statement.)

In a woefully bad piece of "journalism," Insight magazine writer John Elvin tried his best, despite his lack of any real evidence, to huff and puff and assert as true the claim that Hillary Rodham was leading campus protests in support of the Black Panthers. His conclusion was a model of disingenuousness:

> Can there be any doubt, based on the foregoing facts, that Rodham and Lee indeed were student leaders during the Panther protests at Yale? The correct answer is no.

Sure, the answer is "no," because the wrong question has been asked. That Hillary Rodman could fairly have been described as a "student leader" is something no one would dispute. The question being asked here is "Was Hillary Clinton leading campus protests in support of the Black Panthers?" -- a question Elvin dishonestly avoids answering because he can't demonstrate the answer to be "yes." The "foregoing facts" he refers to can be summarized thusly:

* The person who started this rumor says it's true.

* Hillary Rodham associated with people I don't like.

* A bunch of books I don't name say she was a campus activist.

The first two items have no probative value, and the third is carefully worded to conceal the fact that the writer is really stating nothing more than an obvious point no one would dispute, while trying hard to create the misleading impression the point that he can't prove (i.e., that Hillary Rodham actually led campus protests in support of the Black Panthers) is true:

> Insight reviewed biographies of Hillary Clinton by Milton, Brock and Roger Morris for this story and lengthy selections from such other biographies as Barbara Olson's Hell to Pay. Together, relying on primary and other firsthand sources, they unquestionably back Horowitz's contention that Hillary was a campus leader during the Panther protests. She was, by standards of those chaotic and violent times, a moderate voice compared with such fanatics as Yippie leader Jerry Rubin, who exhorted Yale students to "kill your parents," but she played a prominent activist role.

Yes, Hillary Rodham was a "campus leader" and played an "activist role" in her university days. So what? The same could be said of thousands of other people who protested the Vietnam War, or campaigned to get 18-year-olds the vote, or supported equal rights for women. None of that demonstrates anything about Hillary Rodham's alleged support of the Black Panthers. Elvin himself admits that she was "a moderate voice," and it's significant that he doesn't quote from, synopsize, or even identify by title any of the "reviewed biographies" he alludes to, because none of them supports the impression he's trying to create. Not a single one of these biographies quotes anyone who actually saw Hillary Rodham taking part in campus protests for the Panthers, but nearly all of them quote people who knew her back then as saying that radical protest politics simply weren't her style, and that she preferred getting two sides together for reconciliation rather than confrontation. For example, in The Seduction of Hillary Rodham Clinton by David Brock, we find:

> By the end of her first year at Yale, it was clear that Hillary abjured the in-your-face political tactics of Jerry Rubin as well as the exhibitionistic and hedonistic side of the 1960s. She was practical, pragmatic, and mainstream in her strategies, tactics, and presentation.

Stripped of all the invective and blatant political ranting, the case here against Mr. Lee and Ms. Clinton comes down to nothing more than "We don't like their politics" and "They were there," so they must be as morally guilty as the Panthers themselves. As a junior senator from Wisconsin once demonstrated, if you can't defeat your political opponents at the ballot box, and you can't point to anything specific they've done wrong, simply declare them guilty for once having been associated (no matter how tenuous the association) with a group now reviled. "Vilification by association" tactics that worked for McCarthyites in the 1950s apparently still have their adherents today.

Scream, America, when you've had enough.

Update: Versions of the e-mailed denunciation headed "Paul Harvey's 'The rest of the story'" began circulating on the Internet in June 2000. This header plus a comment at the end of the text ("And now, as Paul Harvey says, you know the rest of the story") caused some to believe Paul Harvey had read this piece (or a shorter version of it) on air. Paul Harvey's people confirm he has never broadcast the Panthers and Hillary Clinton story.

The Heart Beat of America [VOTERS] Has Spoken
{ The American Citizens Have Casted Their Votes. } and "IF" You Can Not Hear It . . .

It is then 'clear' that You have No "Pulse" :o)
{ { { { { { The Sound of Silence } } } } } }

Maybe You should READ some of the Words from John 'ff' Kerry's
"Address to Supporters at Fanueil Hall" on the 3rd November 2004:
GoTo=>  http://www.johnkerry.com/
~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~

"In America it is vital that every Vote Count, and that Every Vote be Counted. But the Outcome should be Decided by Voters"

"Thanks to Democrats and Republicans and Independents who stood with us, and Everyone Who Voted no matter who their candidate was."

"But in an American Election, there are no losers, because whether or not our candidates are successful, the next morning we all wake up as Americans. And that -- that is the greatest privilege and the most remarkable good fortune that can come to us on earth. With that gift also comes obligation. We are Required now to Work Together for the Good of Our Country. In the days ahead, we must find common cause. We must join in common effort without remorse or recrimination, without anger or rancor. America is in need of Unity and longing for a larger measure of Compassion."

"I pledge to do my part to try to bridge the partisan divide. I know this is a difficult time for my supporters, but I ask them, all of you, to join me in doing that."

"I'll never forget the wonderful people who came to our rallies, who stood in our rope lines, who put their hopes in our hands, who invested in each and every one of us. I saw in them the truth that America is not only great, but it is good."

"So here -- so with a grateful heart -- I leave this campaign with a prayer that has even greater meaning to me now that I've come to know our vast country so much better. Thanks to all of you and what a privilege it has been.
And that prayer is very simple: GOD BLESS AMERICA."

AGAIN REMEMBER: What John 'ff' Kerry Said In Closing
After Conceding the Election: "GOD BLESS AMERICA"

Well, you have a point, we don't know what her motivation is, but she's apparently gone away.  I'm not trying to shut anyone up, but I make no excuses for taking care of my family.  ;)

I guess that's the whole point - she ignores her ISP's TOS, then she posts blatantly abusive posts - the very same behavior she was jumping everyone else over.  Methinks a frustrated, closeted lesbian or gay male is afoot (snicker).  Anyway, she thought she/he was clever by looking up my callsign on QRZ.com - "no big whoop," as Mike Meyers would say, and I've had time to think about it, and realized it's pretty much a non - issue to me, as my amateur radio callsign is public record.

Fish and chips (aka "fish supper" in Scotland) - hot, greasy, and definately fresh potatoes (not frozen), crisp batter on haddock. Salt and lots of vinegar. Topped with a generous splodge of "HP Brown Sauce". Sometimes a "side order" of mushy peas!

Based on a dare? Looking at haggis, you could be right!

Oh, and violently swinging back on-topic; the only shortwave stations transmitting from Scotland I know of have been Sunday-morning pirates eg. Radio Freedom International (have QSL). But I stand to be corrected.

As a matter of interest, does Minnesota currently have any shortwave transmissions?

I highly recommend the Icom IC-T2H 2 meter handheld.
I love mine!  Unless you live in a big metro area (If you do, you will want 2 meters and 70 cm on your HT).  I got my HT for 90 bucks, and get consistent excellent audio and signal reports, because it puts out a full 5 watts.  Get some NiMH batteries at Sam's Club (the 2000+ maH rated ones), and a charger, and you'll have a LONG lasting battery setup to go with it, all still on the cheap.

Gundalf Grey can't or won't admit it, but he is the fascist. He is the one that wants elections to turn out only in his favor, regardless of what the majority want. Obviously it hasn't occured to him that in the US we choose leaders based on whom the majority want, and in a society where the majority wins, the minority losers have to either accept it and work with the system or go find somewhere else where the majority has no say and agrees with their ultra-liberal loonie philosophies and they get their way every time. I few middle eastern and oriental countries come to mind.

The majority of the voting citizens excersized their voting powers and soundly reject the simple minded dummycrat liberals and their non-values not only for the office of the President, but in Congess as well. The majority spoke and won, the minority lost. He should learn to deal with it, but doubt his simple dummycrat liberal mind can handle it.

Your side cheated and still lost. You can't even win when you do cheat.

Evidence Mounts That The Vote Was Hacked

by Thom Hartmann

When I spoke with Jeff Fisher this morning (Saturday, November 06, 2004), the Democratic candidate for the U.S. House of Representatives from Florida's 16th District said he was waiting for the FBI to show up.

Fisher has evidence, he says, not only that the Florida election was hacked, but of who hacked it and how.

And not just this year, he said, but that these same people had previously hacked the Democratic primary race in 2002 so that Jeb Bush would not have to run against Janet Reno, who presented a real threat to Jeb, but instead against Bill McBride, who Jeb beat.

"It was practice for a national effort," Fisher told me.

And evidence is accumulating that the national effort happened on November 2, 2004.

The State of Florida, for example, publishes a county-by-county record of votes cast and people registered to vote by party affiliation.

Net denizen Kathy Dopp compiled the official state information into a table, available at http://ustogether.org/Florida_Election.htm, and noticed something startling.

While the heavily scrutinized touch-screen voting machines seemed to produce results in which the registered Democrat/Republican ratios matched the Kerry/Bush vote, and so did the optically-scanned paper ballots in the larger counties, in Florida's smaller counties the results from the optically scanned paper ballots - fed into a central tabulator PC and thus vulnerable to hacking - seem to have been reversed.

In Baker County, for example, with 12,887 registered voters, 69.3% of them Democrats and 24.3% of them Republicans, the vote was only 2,180 for Kerry and 7,738 for Bush, the opposite of what is seen everywhere else in the country where registered Democrats largely voted for Kerry.

In Dixie County, with 4,988 registered voters, 77.5% of them Democrats and a mere 15% registered as Republicans, only 1,959 people voted for Kerry, but 4,433 voted for Bush.

The pattern repeats over and over again - but only in the smaller counties where, it was probably assumed, the small voter numbers wouldn't be much noticed.

Franklin County, 77.3% registered Democrats, went 58.5% for Bush.

Holmes County, 72.7% registered Democrats, went 77.25% for Bush.

Yet in the larger counties, where such anomalies would be more obvious to the news media, high percentages of registered Democrats equaled high percentages of votes for Kerry.

More visual analysis of the results can be seen at http://ustogether.org/election04/FloridaDataStats.htm, and www.rubberbug.com/temp/Florida2004chart.htm.

And, although elections officials didn't notice these anomalies, in aggregate they were enough to swing Florida from Kerry to Bush.

If you simply go through the analysis of these counties and reverse the "anomalous" numbers in those counties that appear to have been hacked, suddenly the Florida election results resemble the Florida exit poll results:

Kerry won, and won big.

Those exit poll results have been a problem for reporters ever since Election Day.

Election night, I'd been doing live election coverage for WDEV, one of the radio stations that carries my syndicated show, and, just after midnight, during the 12:20 a.m. Associated Press Radio News feed, I was startled to hear the reporter detail how Karen Hughes had earlier sat George W. Bush down to inform him that he'd lost the election.

The exit polls were clear: Kerry was winning in a landslide.

"Bush took the news stoically," noted the AP report.

But then the computers reported something different.

In several pivotal states.

Conservatives see a conspiracy here: They think the exit polls were rigged.

Dick Morris, the infamous political consultant to the first Clinton campaign who became a Republican consultant and Fox News regular, wrote an article for The Hill, the publication read by every political junkie in Washington, DC, in which he made a couple of brilliant points.

"Exit Polls are almost never wrong," Morris wrote.

"They eliminate the two major potential fallacies in survey research by correctly separating actual voters from those who pretend they will cast ballots but never do and by substituting actual observation for guesswork in judging the relative turnout of different parts of the state."

He added:

"So, according to ABC-TVs exit polls, for example, Kerry was slated to carry Florida, Ohio, New Mexico, Colorado, Nevada, and Iowa, all of which Bush carried. The only swing state the network had going to Bush was West Virginia, which the president won by 10 points."

Yet a few hours after the exit polls were showing a clear Kerry sweep, as the computerized vote numbers began to come in from the various states the election was called for Bush.

How could this happen?

On the CNBC TV show "Topic A With Tina Brown," several months ago, Howard Dean had filled in for Tina Brown as guest host.

His guest was Bev Harris, the Seattle grandmother who started www.blackboxvoting.org from her living room.

Bev pointed out that regardless of how votes were tabulated (other than hand counts, only done in odd places like small towns in Vermont), the real "counting" is done by computers.

Be they Diebold Opti-Scan machines, which read paper ballots filled in by pencil or ink in the voter's hand, or the scanners that read punch cards, or the machines that simply record a touch of the screen, in all cases the final tally is sent to a "central tabulator" machine.

That central tabulator computer is a Windows-based PC.

"In a voting system," Harris explained to Dean on national television, "you have all the different voting machines at all the different polling places, sometimes, as in a county like mine, there's a thousand polling places in a single county. All those machines feed into the one machine so it can add up all the votes. So, of course, if you were going to do something you shouldn't to a voting machine, would it be more convenient to do it to each of the 4000 machines, or just come in here and deal with all of them at once?"

"What surprises people is that the central tabulator is just a PC, like what you and I use. It's just a regular computer."

"So," Dean said, "anybody who can hack into a PC can hack into a central tabulator?"

Harris nodded affirmation, and pointed out how Diebold uses a program called GEMS, which fills the screen of the PC and effectively turns it into the central tabulator system.

"This is the official program that the County Supervisor sees," she said, pointing to a PC that was sitting between them loaded with Diebold's software.

Bev then had Dean open the GEMS program to see the results of a test election.

They went to the screen titled "Election Summary Report" and waited a moment while the PC "adds up all the votes from all the various precincts," and then saw that in this faux election Howard Dean had 1000 votes, Lex Luthor had 500, and Tiger Woods had none.

Dean was winning.

"Of course, you can't tamper with this software," Harris noted.

Diebold wrote a pretty good program.

But, it's running on a Windows PC.

So Harris had Dean close the Diebold GEMS software, go back to the normal Windows PC desktop, click on the "My Computer" icon, choose "Local Disk C:," open the folder titled GEMS, and open the sub-folder "LocalDB" which, Harris noted, "stands for local database, that's where they keep the votes."

Harris then had Dean double-click on a file in that folder titled "Central Tabulator Votes," which caused the PC to open the vote count in a database program like Excel.

In the "Sum of the Candidates" row of numbers, she found that in one precinct Dean had received 800 votes and Lex Luthor had gotten 400.

"Let's just flip those," Harris said, as Dean cut and pasted the numbers from one cell into the other.

"And," she added magnanimously, "let's give 100 votes to Tiger."

They closed the database, went back into the official GEMS software "the legitimate way, you're the county supervisor and you're checking on the progress of your election."

As the screen displayed the official voter tabulation, Harris said,

"And you can see now that Howard Dean has only 500 votes, Lex Luthor has 900, and Tiger Woods has 100."

Dean, the winner, was now the loser.

Harris sat up a bit straighter, smiled, and said, "We just edited an election, and it took us 90 seconds."

On live national television. (You can see the clip on www.votergate.tv.)

Which brings us back to Morris and those pesky exit polls that had Karen Hughes telling George W. Bush that he'd lost the election in a landslide.

Morris's conspiracy theory is that the exit polls "were sabotage" to cause people in the western states to not bother voting for Bush, since the networks would call the election based on the exit polls for Kerry.

But the networks didn't do that, and had never intended to.

It makes far more sense that the exit polls were right - they weren't done on Diebold PCs - and that the vote itself was hacked.

And not only for the presidential candidate - Jeff Fisher thinks this hit him and pretty much every other Democratic candidate for national office in the most-hacked swing states.

So far, the only national "mainstream" media to come close to this story was Keith Olbermann on his show Friday night, November 5th, when he noted that it was curious that all the voting machine irregularities so far uncovered seem to favor Bush.

In the meantime, the Washington Post and other media are now going through single-bullet-theory-like contortions to explain how the exit polls had failed.

But I agree with Fox's Dick Morris on this one, at least in large part.

Wrapping up his story for The Hill, Morris wrote in his final paragraph, "This was no mere mistake. Exit polls cannot be as wrong across the board as they were on election night. I suspect foul play."

ELECTION WAS RIGGED!

Evidence Mounts That The Vote Was Hacked

by Thom Hartmann

When I spoke with Jeff Fisher this morning (Saturday, November 06, 2004), the Democratic candidate for the U.S. House of Representatives from Florida's 16th District said he was waiting for the FBI to show up.

Fisher has evidence, he says, not only that the Florida election was hacked, but of who hacked it and how.

And not just this year, he said, but that these same people had previously hacked the Democratic primary race in 2002 so that Jeb Bush would not have to run against Janet Reno, who presented a real threat to Jeb, but instead against Bill McBride, who Jeb beat.

"It was practice for a national effort," Fisher told me.

And evidence is accumulating that the national effort happened on November 2, 2004.

The State of Florida, for example, publishes a county-by-county record of votes cast and people registered to vote by party affiliation.

Net denizen Kathy Dopp compiled the official state information into a table, available at http://ustogether.org/Florida_Election.htm, and noticed something startling.

While the heavily scrutinized touch-screen voting machines seemed to produce results in which the registered Democrat/Republican ratios matched the Kerry/Bush vote, and so did the optically-scanned paper ballots in the larger counties, in Florida's smaller counties the results from the optically scanned paper ballots - fed into a central tabulator PC and thus vulnerable to hacking - seem to have been reversed.

In Baker County, for example, with 12,887 registered voters, 69.3% of them Democrats and 24.3% of them Republicans, the vote was only 2,180 for Kerry and 7,738 for Bush, the opposite of what is seen everywhere else in the country where registered Democrats largely voted for Kerry.

In Dixie County, with 4,988 registered voters, 77.5% of them Democrats and a mere 15% registered as Republicans, only 1,959 people voted for Kerry, but 4,433 voted for Bush.

The pattern repeats over and over again - but only in the smaller counties where, it was probably assumed, the small voter numbers wouldn't be much noticed.

Franklin County, 77.3% registered Democrats, went 58.5% for Bush.

Holmes County, 72.7% registered Democrats, went 77.25% for Bush.

Yet in the larger counties, where such anomalies would be more obvious to the news media, high percentages of registered Democrats equaled high percentages of votes for Kerry.

More visual analysis of the results can be seen at http://ustogether.org/election04/FloridaDataStats.htm, and www.rubberbug.com/temp/Florida2004chart.htm.

And, although elections officials didn't notice these anomalies, in aggregate they were enough to swing Florida from Kerry to Bush.

If you simply go through the analysis of these counties and reverse the "anomalous" numbers in those counties that appear to have been hacked, suddenly the Florida election results resemble the Florida exit poll results:

Kerry won, and won big.

Those exit poll results have been a problem for reporters ever since Election Day.

Election night, I'd been doing live election coverage for WDEV, one of the radio stations that carries my syndicated show, and, just after midnight, during the 12:20 a.m. Associated Press Radio News feed, I was startled to hear the reporter detail how Karen Hughes had earlier sat George W. Bush down to inform him that he'd lost the election.

The exit polls were clear: Kerry was winning in a landslide.

"Bush took the news stoically," noted the AP report.

But then the computers reported something different.

In several pivotal states.

Conservatives see a conspiracy here: They think the exit polls were rigged.

Dick Morris, the infamous political consultant to the first Clinton campaign who became a Republican consultant and Fox News regular, wrote an article for The Hill, the publication read by every political junkie in Washington, DC, in which he made a couple of brilliant points.

"Exit Polls are almost never wrong," Morris wrote.

"They eliminate the two major potential fallacies in survey research by correctly separating actual voters from those who pretend they will cast ballots but never do and by substituting actual observation for guesswork in judging the relative turnout of different parts of the state."

He added:

"So, according to ABC-TVs exit polls, for example, Kerry was slated to carry Florida, Ohio, New Mexico, Colorado, Nevada, and Iowa, all of which Bush carried. The only swing state the network had going to Bush was West Virginia, which the president won by 10 points."

Yet a few hours after the exit polls were showing a clear Kerry sweep, as the computerized vote numbers began to come in from the various states the election was called for Bush.

How could this happen?

On the CNBC TV show "Topic A With Tina Brown," several months ago, Howard Dean had filled in for Tina Brown as guest host.

His guest was Bev Harris, the Seattle grandmother who started www.blackboxvoting.org from her living room.

Bev pointed out that regardless of how votes were tabulated (other than hand counts, only done in odd places like small towns in Vermont), the real "counting" is done by computers.

Be they Diebold Opti-Scan machines, which read paper ballots filled in by pencil or ink in the voter's hand, or the scanners that read punch cards, or the machines that simply record a touch of the screen, in all cases the final tally is sent to a "central tabulator" machine.

That central tabulator computer is a Windows-based PC.

"In a voting system," Harris explained to Dean on national television, "you have all the different voting machines at all the different polling places, sometimes, as in a county like mine, there's a thousand polling places in a single county. All those machines feed into the one machine so it can add up all the votes. So, of course, if you were going to do something you shouldn't to a voting machine, would it be more convenient to do it to each of the 4000 machines, or just come in here and deal with all of them at once?"

"What surprises people is that the central tabulator is just a PC, like what you and I use. It's just a regular computer."

"So," Dean said, "anybody who can hack into a PC can hack into a central tabulator?"

Harris nodded affirmation, and pointed out how Diebold uses a program called GEMS, which fills the screen of the PC and effectively turns it into the central tabulator system.

"This is the official program that the County Supervisor sees," she said, pointing to a PC that was sitting between them loaded with Diebold's software.

Bev then had Dean open the GEMS program to see the results of a test election.

They went to the screen titled "Election Summary Report" and waited a moment while the PC "adds up all the votes from all the various precincts," and then saw that in this faux election Howard Dean had 1000 votes, Lex Luthor had 500, and Tiger Woods had none.

Dean was winning.

"Of course, you can't tamper with this software," Harris noted.

Diebold wrote a pretty good program.

But, it's running on a Windows PC.

So Harris had Dean close the Diebold GEMS software, go back to the normal Windows PC desktop, click on the "My Computer" icon, choose "Local Disk C:," open the folder titled GEMS, and open the sub-folder "LocalDB" which, Harris noted, "stands for local database, that's where they keep the votes."

Harris then had Dean double-click on a file in that folder titled "Central Tabulator Votes," which caused the PC to open the vote count in a database program like Excel.

In the "Sum of the Candidates" row of numbers, she found that in one precinct Dean had received 800 votes and Lex Luthor had gotten 400.

"Let's just flip those," Harris said, as Dean cut and pasted the numbers from one cell into the other.

"And," she added magnanimously, "let's give 100 votes to Tiger."

They closed the database, went back into the official GEMS software "the legitimate way, you're the county supervisor and you're checking on the progress of your election."

As the screen displayed the official voter tabulation, Harris said,

"And you can see now that Howard Dean has only 500 votes, Lex Luthor has 900, and Tiger Woods has 100."

Dean, the winner, was now the loser.

Harris sat up a bit straighter, smiled, and said, "We just edited an election, and it took us 90 seconds."

To shut up; why that's a dictatorship.

No. It's a pigheaded way of promoting dictatorship.

No, a real democracy is based on (1) campaigning (2) choosing a winner (3) the winners LEADING.

You're confusing elections with democracy itself.
Elections are a component of democracy.

  However in this election, its clear that the margin of victory

You call just about every one who disagrees with your a

USA (Indiana): The US-American religious network LeSEA-Broadcasting has released the new winter schedule for its short wave stations.

Although transmissions were moved from WHRI Noblesville to WSHB Cypress Creek transmissions are still listed as WHRI - Angel 1 and WHRI - Angel 2. Since this purchase the long standing continuity of the WHRI schedule, has been replaced by much more complicated schedules. This winter's schedule is the most complicated thus far.

Angel 1 (to the Americas)
0100 - 0600 7315 kHz Sa Su
0100 - 0500 5835 kHz Mo-Fr
0500 - 0600 5970 kHz Mo-Fr
0600 - 1000 7315 kHz
1000 - 1300 9495 kHz
1300 - 1900 15105 kHz
1900 - 2200 15665kHz
2300 - 0100 7315 kHz

Angel 2 (North America, Europe, Africa)
0800 - 1100 5860 kHz
1100 - 1300 7535 kHz
1300 - 2200 9840 kHz
2200 - 0800 7535 kHz

The overall schedule of the Pacific and Asia station KWHR Hawaii continues to be cut back. Obviously there is less demand by US-groups for short wave broadcasting over a station that does not have a primary or secondary coverage of North America. On the other hand KWHR carries programmes from Radio Free Asia and dissident groups.

Angel 3 (to Asia)
0200 - 0400 17510 kHz
0400 - 0600 15220 kHz
0600 - 1900 9930 kHz

Angel 4 (to Oceania)
0600 - 1000 11565 kHz
1000 - 1200 11565 kHz Sa Su
The African schedule of WHRA Greenbush has also been cut back.

Angel 5 (to Africa)
0000 - 0400 7580 kHz
0400 - 0500 5850 kHz
0500 - 0600 5835 kHz
0600 - 0800 7580 kHz
1300 - 1600 17560 kHz
1600 - 2100 17650 kHz
2100 - 0000 9455 kHz

The above claim is based on what credible, factual evidence?
And dont bother claiming that a Kerry votes indicates that a voter

Well, yeah, but he still got more votes than the other guy, which is more than you can say for Bush in 2000.

Generally speaking, dimmers are bad news throughout the HF spectrum -- when in use. No noise problems noted when they are turned off.

Brian, are you a tad confused there, dude????

 Did you notice the title of the newsgroup??

 "rec.radio.shortwave"

 That means postings for this group pertain to shortwave radio despite your other interests. Post your other interests in groups devoted for them.

And your posts contributing to this group are where exactly? Fuck off, bitch.

If you broadcast your live scanner over the net did you know you can now send your listeners live text data so they know what services they are listening to?
To view how this is done visit my web page below and click on my scanner tutorial page then click on metatag tutorial click here.
To see the text data in action visit my main web page below then click on listen feed1 and in around 2 minutes or so you will see the text data in your Winamp player showing what your listening to very cool check it out!!!!

Spock would build his own for $200, and it would be better than

I agree. Spock is a badass. Remember the show where him and Kirk were on the planet run by Mobsters and Spock made a radio from old tubes and components so they could talk to the Enterprise?

Yes, I am.  It is called a simple matter of supply and demand.

Mother nature uses it very well and has "evolved" for millions of years.

Only the strong shall survive - including "money", people and ideas.

Yours, well, destined for the ash heaps of history I'm afraid.

Light-dimmer Interference Reduction

Radio Amateurs who've have been cursed with RFI from solid-state light dimmers will be interested to know that at least one domestic manufacturer -Lutron - produces light dimmers that incorporate RFI suppression techniques. The Lutron NOVA series uses toroidal chokes that provide a significant level of RFI suppression.

I bought a Lutron model N-600, which will handle up to 600 watts of incandescent lighting. Temporarily installed in my radio shack, a generic light dimmer produced an S9+ reading at 230 kHz (an arbitrary noisy frequency). The N-600 produced a reading of S3, a difference of about 40 dB. Admittedly, this is not zero, but installing the N-600 some distance away provided a reduction in RFI that is very gratifying. Indeed, I new hear new noise sources, heretofore undetectable through the dimmer din.

You're not likely to find these dimmers at your local discount store, and they are not inexpensive. Check for the availability of these dimmers at a lighting fixture store and expect to pay about $25 apiece for them.

If you come up with a better solution for these problems, please write to the RFI Desk with the solution. It sounds like it would be a good candidate for Hints and Kinks!

I took an elderly lady to the polls on Tuesday and helped her vote as she was visually impaired.  (I had voted early.)  I hadn't gotten the car parked when someone was standing outside to tell me how to vote.
"Hi!  I'm with the [blankety blank] political action committee and THIS helped the lady vote exactly opposite to what all the liberals wanted!

I had the same experience when I went to the polls, except the folks doing the electioneering were handing out republican sample ballots and other paraphernalia for Bush and so on. I mean, that's what electioneers do.

The contetnt is sometimes useful for IDing a station for some reason.
But _discussing_ on the content is clearly offtopic here. Thanks.

1. I not you didn't show how Kerry lost "big," so I take it you're admitting again that you're a liar.
2. No occurance of the word "fraud." so again, you're a liar.

Since the mid-1960s, I have searched far and wide to find a radio that had such good reception as the one on Gilligan's Island.

That incredible DX powerhouse of a radio could regularly pick up US mainland broadcasters -- KDKA comes to mind -- from its location on a tiny island located thousands of miles from the US mainland deep in the South Pacific. Not just at night, mind you, but right in the middle of the day.

Also, this radio contained some amazing self-generating batteries. They never ran low, despite the fact that there was no AC plug available for charging purposes, nor did it have any type of crank-based charging mechanism. It's possible that the batteries might have been the product of a secret military cold-war era attempt at attaining a self-sustaining, zero-point energy equilibrium.

I would like to get one of these radios and hopefully some of those batteries as well. If anybody finds one on ebay, be sure to post it here. Thanks.

You are - at this time - the major contributor of SPAM in this newsgroup.

Again: please stop posting SPAM and please refrain from trying to be a "moderator" on this newsgroup. You're not Al Haig and you're not in charge.

II've never seen you post anything about shortwave radio so can only surmise that you're SPAMming rec.radio.shortwave just to get people irritated at you and treat you just like your mommie and dada do so that you can feel like a big "man".

Did you know that everytime you send a SPAM, it cuts off one day of your life? For your health's sake, stop SPAMming. When you get into junior high school, you'll understand better.

I don't think "she" will listen.

I think it will be far more effective to send abuse complaints to:

abuse@verizon.net

Clearly, "she" is mentally unbalanced, making references to me personally, where I live, my wife's name, etc.

"She" is obviously willing to go waaaay over the edge, so I don't think it will do you any good to appeal to "her" better nature.  Better to send a complaint to the address above, and hope the Verizon will do the right thing, and at least send her a warning.

Your rudeness and immaturity have been proved quite well by your SPAM.

You've a very naughty, very immature young boy and you should have your gastro-intestinal tract and everything related to it washed out with No Tears Baby Soap.

Please take your anti-verizon.net crusade elsewhere.

| Here's a snip from a 1996 post pointing to the charter & faq:
| http://www.faqs.org/faqs/radio/monitoring/introduction/
| (my emphasis added in all-caps)
| ###################
| What is rec.radio.shortwave for?
|
| ...This group is intended to be a place where ANY radio
| monitoring topic can and should be discussed.  We are happy to
```

| hear from posters who listen to any part of the radio or | microwave spectrum, from DC to daylight.  We discuss topics of
| ALMOST ANY KIND, ranging from (but not limited to) SHORTWAVE
| BROADCASTING, DXing small or distant shortwave stations,
| utility and teletype monitoring, military eavesdropping,
| station schedules, QSLing sw broadcasters, spectrum
| usage, equipment design and modifications, antennas, receiver
| reviews and recommendations, AND MANY MORE...
| ###################
| So, when it gets to the part about topics, what is the very | first item in the example list?:
|
| "...We discuss topics of almost any kind, ranging from (but
| not limited to) shortwave broadcasting..."
| And there you have it.
|
| Julie (if that's your real name), Mike Terry, Volker Tonn -
| You are all hereby relieved of your net-kopping duties. You
| may lay down your arms & return peacfully to your farms and | fields; You fought bravely and honorably, but now the war has | ended.

Honorably?  By making reference to where I live and the names of members of my family?  By posting one of my email addresses multiple times to encourage spam?  She doesn't understand honor, and for that reason, I think it's time to encourage Verizon to take away her posting privileges.  "She" is a control freak, and will stop at nothing to shut people up.

It's time to fight fire with fire.  "She" is in way over her head.

Reason to bury all power lines maybe??....And bury BPL under a rock hopefully!!

Question?

Those of you that live in a townhome or other area with buried utilities.....Can you tell me if these area's seem to be quieter overall than locations with overhead utilities?

so, how is propagation this year?
any unusual catches?
it is my understanding that we may be in the solar min.
i started dx'ing in '99, which put me in for the whole last solar max, so i'm kind of curious as to how good the odd little catches might be (dare i pray for alice springs or antarctica?)

Try 17675 now and then for New Zealand.  k35454.

High solar flux (expected to drop rapidly from about 200 to about 120 during 2002), high A-index (over 10) geomagnetic storms, proton events and polar-cap absorption are bad news; they tend to mean poor long-distance reception of medium wave and tropical band shortwave stations, especially paths over polar areas and paths to east and west of your location are affected. If you live far north, reception may be good towards south and vice versa on the Southern hemisphere.

Indices from the U.S. NOAA Space Environment Center in Boulder Colorado, updated every three hours and published in real time at http://www.dxing.info/propagation/

For all those who are unhappy about the election, good news - you can move to Canada.

Go to http://www.cic.gc.ca/english/index.html and check it out.

I live in Canada and I do NOT recommend moving here.  We have troubles enough as it is.  k35454.

That's true - Clinton probably wouldn't have won without Perot in 92, but he was very strong in 96. My purpose was to respond to the OP who made the point about the country being more divided under Clinton. Clinton was a very popular president, and his support was not nearly as regional as both Bush's and Kerry's - he took about 90 more electoral votes than Bush in his second election and in his first as well.

My issue was with the original poster's comment about divided. I agree with you that the notion of "divided" is subjective, but whatever divided means, the closeness of an election doesn't really say that much about it. An election can be roughly even, but if the parties had nominated Tweedledee and Tweedledum, it was just a popularity contest and didn't speak to how divided people were on issues. Conversely the election can go 60/40 and if the 40% strongly hold a position that is very much at variance with that of the other 60%, the country is divided.

And by the way, Bush referred yesterday to the political capital he earned in his FIRST election. Isn't that waving a magic wand over a minority president?

Only 59% of the electorate voted. Of that 59%, 30% voted for Bush and 29% voted for Kerry.

Therefore 30% of the electorate voted for Bush, this is not THE AMERICAN PEOPLE.

This is not a mandate to dismantle the New Deal or to turn Fallujah into a parking lot, Iraq into a desert.

51% in favor of Bush to 48% in favor of Kerry say you are wrong.

You need to deal with that.

I'd hardly call dummycrat thugs shooting a GOP offices a matter of free voting. I'd hardly call dummycrat thugs slashing the tires of vans that were going to take people to vote free voting.

LOL!!! Keep trying, the MAJORITY of the voters said in a loud clear voice the no longer fall for your simple minded dummycrat liberal crap.

Hi:

Since the mid-60's I've been looking for a woman who had the same effect on me as  "Ginger" when I was 15 or so who comes equipped with her own wardrobe, massive high-heel collection and makeup case!

Just to keep the post on topic ... sorry can't help with one of those super-receivers ... LOL.

Congrads on passing the test Jennie

Be sure you want an HT instead of a mobile.
A mobile can be easily removed from the car and used as base station (with an external power supply)

For $300 you can buy both an HT and a mobile and a power supply -- example HT - ICOM IC-T2H and an ICOM 2100H Mobile Suggest you go to a local Radio Store in your area -- look at and try out the various HT's and mobiles and discuss them with the sales people.

Lots of HT Reviews are at URL:
http://www.eham.net/reviews/products/49

Lots of mobile reviews at URL:
http://www.eham.net/reviews/products/38

The best code practice program is the one that works for you.
Beware of advice that sez -- "this is the best one" as it might have been for the person who recommended same but just doesn't click with you.

For Morse trainer freebees and demos see URL:
http://ac6v.com/morseprograms.htm

For how to learn the code (varies with the individual) see URL:
http://ac6v.com/morseaids.htm#Learn

Two things that almost all will recommend is:
"Study EVERY day for 20 minutes to a half hour"

AND

"Whatever method you use, try to hear the code directly as a letter. IOW, don't try to translate the sound into dot-dash and translate that into A, just hear the dot-dash and think A.  Easier said than done, but when you master it your receiving speed will increase dramatically."

The AVERAGE person needs about 30 hours of study and practice on the code to hit 5 wpm.

Good Luck

Evidence Mounts That The Vote Was Hacked

by Thom Hartmann

When I spoke with Jeff Fisher this morning (Saturday, November 06, 2004), the Democratic candidate for the U.S. House of Representatives from Florida's 16th District said he was waiting for the FBI to show up.

Fisher has evidence, he says, not only that the Florida election was hacked, but of who hacked it and how.

And not just this year, he said, but that these same people had previously hacked the Democratic primary race in 2002 so that Jeb Bush would not have to run against Janet Reno, who presented a real threat to Jeb, but instead against Bill McBride, who Jeb beat.

"It was practice for a national effort," Fisher told me.

And evidence is accumulating that the national effort happened on November 2, 2004.

The State of Florida, for example, publishes a county-by-county record of votes cast and people registered to vote by party affiliation.

Net denizen Kathy Dopp compiled the official state information into a table, available at http://ustogether.org/Florida_Election.htm, and noticed something startling.

While the heavily scrutinized touch-screen voting machines seemed to produce results in which the registered Democrat/Republican ratios matched the Kerry/Bush vote, and so did the optically-scanned paper ballots in the larger counties, in Florida's smaller counties the results from the optically scanned paper ballots - fed into a central tabulator PC and thus vulnerable to hacking - seem to have been reversed.

In Baker County, for example, with 12,887 registered voters, 69.3% of them Democrats and 24.3% of them Republicans, the vote was only 2,180 for Kerry and 7,738 for Bush, the opposite of what is seen everywhere else in the country where registered Democrats largely voted for Kerry.

In Dixie County, with 4,988 registered voters, 77.5% of them Democrats and a mere 15% registered as Republicans, only 1,959 people voted for Kerry, but 4,433 voted for Bush.

The pattern repeats over and over again - but only in the smaller counties where, it was probably assumed, the small voter numbers wouldn't be much noticed.

Franklin County, 77.3% registered Democrats, went 58.5% for Bush.

Holmes County, 72.7% registered Democrats, went 77.25% for Bush.

Yet in the larger counties, where such anomalies would be more obvious to the news media, high percentages of registered Democrats equaled high percentages of votes for Kerry.

More visual analysis of the results can be seen at http://ustogether.org/election04/FloridaDataStats.htm, and www.rubberbug.com/temp/Florida2004chart.htm.

And, although elections officials didn't notice these anomalies, in aggregate they were enough to swing Florida from Kerry to Bush.

If you simply go through the analysis of these counties and reverse the "anomalous" numbers in those counties that appear to have been hacked, suddenly the Florida election results resemble the Florida exit poll results:

Kerry won, and won big.

Those exit poll results have been a problem for reporters ever since Election Day.

Election night, I'd been doing live election coverage for WDEV, one of the radio stations that carries my syndicated show, and, just after midnight, during the 12:20 a.m. Associated Press Radio News feed, I was startled to hear the reporter detail how Karen Hughes had earlier sat George W. Bush down to inform him that he'd lost the election.

The exit polls were clear: Kerry was winning in a landslide.

"Bush took the news stoically," noted the AP report.

But then the computers reported something different.

In several pivotal states.

Conservatives see a conspiracy here: They think the exit polls were rigged.

Dick Morris, the infamous political consultant to the first Clinton campaign who became a Republican consultant and Fox News regular, wrote an article for The Hill, the publication read by every political junkie in Washington, DC, in which he made a couple of brilliant points.

"Exit Polls are almost never wrong," Morris wrote.

"They eliminate the two major potential fallacies in survey research by correctly separating actual voters from those who pretend they will cast ballots but never do and by substituting actual observation for guesswork in judging the relative turnout of different parts of the state."

He added:

"So, according to ABC-TVs exit polls, for example, Kerry was slated to carry Florida, Ohio, New Mexico, Colorado, Nevada, and Iowa, all of which Bush carried. The only swing state the network had going to Bush was West Virginia, which the president won by 10 points."

Yet a few hours after the exit polls were showing a clear Kerry sweep, as the computerized vote numbers began to come in from the various states the election was called for Bush.

How could this happen?

On the CNBC TV show "Topic A With Tina Brown," several months ago, Howard Dean had filled in for Tina Brown as guest host.

His guest was Bev Harris, the Seattle grandmother who started www.blackboxvoting.org from her living room.

Bev pointed out that regardless of how votes were tabulated (other than hand counts, only done in odd places like small towns in Vermont), the real "counting" is done by computers.

Be they Diebold Opti-Scan machines, which read paper ballots filled in by pencil or ink in the voter's hand, or the scanners that read punch cards, or the machines that simply record a touch of the screen, in all cases the final tally is sent to a "central tabulator" machine.

That central tabulator computer is a Windows-based PC.

"In a voting system," Harris explained to Dean on national television, "you have all the different voting machines at all the different polling places, sometimes, as in a county like mine, there's a thousand polling places in a single county. All those machines feed into the one machine so it can add up all the votes. So, of course, if you were going to do something you shouldn't to a voting machine, would it be more convenient to do it to each of the 4000 machines, or just come in here and deal with all of them at once?"

"What surprises people is that the central tabulator is just a PC, like what you and I use. It's just a regular computer."

"So," Dean said, "anybody who can hack into a PC can hack into a central tabulator?"

Harris nodded affirmation, and pointed out how Diebold uses a program called GEMS, which fills the screen of the PC and effectively turns it into the central tabulator system.

"This is the official program that the County Supervisor sees," she said, pointing to a PC that was sitting between them loaded with Diebold's software.

Bev then had Dean open the GEMS program to see the results of a test election.

They went to the screen titled "Election Summary Report" and waited a moment while the PC "adds up all the votes from all the various precincts," and then saw that in this faux election Howard Dean had 1000 votes, Lex Luthor had 500, and Tiger Woods had none.

Dean was winning.

"Of course, you can't tamper with this software," Harris noted.

Diebold wrote a pretty good program.

But, it's running on a Windows PC.

So Harris had Dean close the Diebold GEMS software, go back to the normal Windows PC desktop, click on the "My Computer" icon, choose "Local Disk C:," open the folder titled GEMS, and open the sub-folder "LocalDB" which, Harris noted, "stands for local database, that's where they keep the votes."

Harris then had Dean double-click on a file in that folder titled "Central Tabulator Votes," which caused the PC to open the vote count in a database program like Excel.

In the "Sum of the Candidates" row of numbers, she found that in one precinct Dean had received 800 votes and Lex Luthor had gotten 400.

"Let's just flip those," Harris said, as Dean cut and pasted the numbers from one cell into the other.

"And," she added magnanimously, "let's give 100 votes to Tiger."

They closed the database, went back into the official GEMS software "the legitimate way, you're the county supervisor and you're checking on the progress of your election."

As the screen displayed the official voter tabulation, Harris said,

"And you can see now that Howard Dean has only 500 votes, Lex Luthor has 900, and Tiger Woods has 100."

Dean, the winner, was now the loser.

Harris sat up a bit straighter, smiled, and said, "We just edited an election, and it took us 90 seconds."

On live national television. (You can see the clip on www.votergate.tv.)

Which brings us back to Morris and those pesky exit polls that had Karen Hughes telling George W. Bush that he'd lost the election in a landslide.

Morris's conspiracy theory is that the exit polls "were sabotage" to cause people in the western states to not bother voting for Bush, since the networks would call the election based on the exit polls for Kerry.

But the networks didn't do that, and had never intended to.

It makes far more sense that the exit polls were right - they weren't done on Diebold PCs - and that the vote itself was hacked.

And not only for the presidential candidate - Jeff Fisher thinks this hit him and pretty much every other Democratic candidate for national office in the most-hacked swing states.

So far, the only national "mainstream" media to come close to this story was Keith Olbermann on his show Friday night, November 5th, when he noted that it was curious that all the voting machine irregularities so far uncovered seem to favor Bush.

In the meantime, the Washington Post and other media are now going through single-bullet-theory-like contortions to explain how the exit polls had failed.

But I agree with Fox's Dick Morris on this one, at least in large part.

Wrapping up his story for The Hill, Morris wrote in his final paragraph, "This was no mere mistake. Exit polls cannot be as wrong across the board as they were on election night. I suspect foul play."

Unless you have a 1-radio "station" and no lightning protection of any kind, this is a very bad choice.

It is also an expensive undertaking, requiring both a dedicated power circuit and independent grounding. It's a favorite gimmick of audiophiles but with limited results unless you have noise problems that can't be corrected by repair or replacement of the offending emitters. While the audiophile can experiment like that to his heart's content, communication systems should never use independent grounds. That means everything in the shack.  All of our grounding must be bonded, and that means either fixing or avoiding the use of noise emitters in the first place. For the computer, keep interconnecting data cables away from the coax feedlines, and place RF chokes on all power and data cables at both ends. That handles signal noise. The computer's casing provides all the shielding that device should ever need.

We haven't GONE anywhere.  The non-partisan PIPA Poll demonstrated that the majority of Bush Voters were voting for him on the basis of untruths that, in some cases, even George Bush had repudiated.

If you want zombies voting you into office, that's your business, but it shows the nature of your support and it points out the danger of your position.

And the largest number of voters in the history of the country voted against George Bush who won on the slimmest margin since Wilson.

Deal with it, fascist.

No, I'll leave that to fascist mentalities like your own.  In my country we have something called dissent.  We're Americans and we don't HAVE to LIKE IT.

  This observer of this universe amazes me with his "right-on" assesment of all things "political". Before the election he filled these Newsgroups with deep insight. We all await more "fud".

   There are still small groups of the "Flat Earth Society"...this Exactly.  This isn't yet the fascist country the righties are aiming at.  We have a little thing called "dissent" here.  Thomas Jefferson referred to it as "the highest form of Patriotism."

We don't HAVE to LIKE a crappy leader.  We're Americans.

1. You're the fascist by any definition of the term.
2. 51% isn't a mandate in ANY context.

Deal with it, fascist.

Right.  I'm the one who's started a police state wedded to theocracy and coporatocracy.

Keep telling yourself that, fascist.

That remark really betrays your ignorance, fascist. The Bush regime is the most focus group led regime in all of American history.

Yeah.  Partly.  It's a lot like saying that Home ownership is the highest it's ever been...a favorite of George Bush.  Home ownership is ALWAYS the highest it's ever been.

MII,

Why are you so down on a 'fellow' "Canadian" William Shatner ?

AKA:  'Captain James "T" Kirk' to Star Trekkies.
Who was born March 22 2233 (300 Years later to the Day) in Riverside, Iowa on the 'United Planet' Earth.
http://www.startrek.com/startrek/view/series/TOS/character/1112496.html

NOTE:  The "T" was for 'Tiberius'

Back-to-Reality:  The Actor and Writer William Shatner was born March 22, 1931 in Montreal, Quebec, Canada.

I noticed that some are 2 Meter/440 MHz

Are those two ranges for technician too?

You're confusing whining, crying, etc. with rational discussion and debate. THis system of gov't would never have taken shape had the framers deteriorated in their deliberations to petty whining and complaining.

Evidence Mounts That The Vote Was Hacked

by Thom Hartmann

When I spoke with Jeff Fisher this morning (Saturday, November 06, 2004), the Democratic candidate for the U.S. House of Representatives from Florida's 16th District said he was waiting for the FBI to show up.

Fisher has evidence, he says, not only that the Florida election was hacked, but of who hacked it and how.

And not just this year, he said, but that these same people had previously hacked the Democratic primary race in 2002 so that Jeb Bush would not have to run against Janet Reno, who presented a real threat to Jeb, but instead against Bill McBride, who Jeb beat.

"It was practice for a national effort," Fisher told me.

And evidence is accumulating that the national effort happened on November 2, 2004.

The State of Florida, for example, publishes a county-by-county record of votes cast and people registered to vote by party affiliation.

Net denizen Kathy Dopp compiled the official state information into a table, available at http://ustogether.org/Florida_Election.htm, and noticed something startling.

While the heavily scrutinized touch-screen voting machines seemed to produce results in which the registered Democrat/Republican ratios matched the Kerry/Bush vote, and so did the optically-scanned paper ballots in the larger counties, in Florida's smaller counties the results from the optically scanned paper ballots - fed into a central tabulator PC and thus vulnerable to hacking - seem to have been reversed.

In Baker County, for example, with 12,887 registered voters, 69.3% of them Democrats and 24.3% of them Republicans, the vote was only 2,180 for Kerry and 7,738 for Bush, the opposite of what is seen everywhere else in the country where registered Democrats largely voted for Kerry.

In Dixie County, with 4,988 registered voters, 77.5% of them Democrats and a mere 15% registered as Republicans, only 1,959 people voted for Kerry, but 4,433 voted for Bush.

The pattern repeats over and over again - but only in the smaller counties where, it was probably assumed, the small voter numbers wouldn't be much noticed.

Franklin County, 77.3% registered Democrats, went 58.5% for Bush.

Holmes County, 72.7% registered Democrats, went 77.25% for Bush.

Yet in the larger counties, where such anomalies would be more obvious to the news media, high percentages of registered Democrats equaled high percentages of votes for Kerry.

More visual analysis of the results can be seen at http://ustogether.org/election04/FloridaDataStats.htm, and www.rubberbug.com/temp/Florida2004chart.htm.

And, although elections officials didn't notice these anomalies, in aggregate they were enough to swing Florida from Kerry to Bush.

If you simply go through the analysis of these counties and reverse the "anomalous" numbers in those counties that appear to have been hacked, suddenly the Florida election results resemble the Florida exit poll results:

Kerry won, and won big.

Those exit poll results have been a problem for reporters ever since Election Day.

Election night, I'd been doing live election coverage for WDEV, one of the radio stations that carries my syndicated show, and, just after midnight, during the 12:20 a.m. Associated Press Radio News feed, I was startled to hear the reporter detail how Karen Hughes had earlier sat George W. Bush down to inform him that he'd lost the election.

The exit polls were clear: Kerry was winning in a landslide.

"Bush took the news stoically," noted the AP report.

But then the computers reported something different.

In several pivotal states.

Conservatives see a conspiracy here: They think the exit polls were rigged.

Dick Morris, the infamous political consultant to the first Clinton campaign who became a Republican consultant and Fox News regular, wrote an article for The Hill, the publication read by every political junkie in Washington, DC, in which he made a couple of brilliant points.

"Exit Polls are almost never wrong," Morris wrote.

"They eliminate the two major potential fallacies in survey research by correctly separating actual voters from those who pretend they will cast ballots but never do and by substituting actual observation for guesswork in judging the relative turnout of different parts of the state."

He added:

"So, according to ABC-TVs exit polls, for example, Kerry was slated to carry Florida, Ohio, New Mexico, Colorado, Nevada, and Iowa, all of which Bush carried. The only swing state the network had going to Bush was West Virginia, which the president won by 10 points."

Yet a few hours after the exit polls were showing a clear Kerry sweep, as the computerized vote numbers began to come in from the various states the election was called for Bush.

How could this happen?

On the CNBC TV show "Topic A With Tina Brown," several months ago, Howard Dean had filled in for Tina Brown as guest host.

His guest was Bev Harris, the Seattle grandmother who started www.blackboxvoting.org from her living room.

Bev pointed out that regardless of how votes were tabulated (other than hand counts, only done in odd places like small towns in Vermont), the real "counting" is done by computers.

Be they Diebold Opti-Scan machines, which read paper ballots filled in by pencil or ink in the voter's hand, or the scanners that read punch cards, or the machines that simply record a touch of the screen, in all cases the final tally is sent to a "central tabulator" machine.

That central tabulator computer is a Windows-based PC.

"In a voting system," Harris explained to Dean on national television, "you have all the different voting machines at all the different polling places, sometimes, as in a county like mine, there's a thousand polling places in a single county. All those machines feed into the one machine so it can add up all the votes. So, of course, if you were going to do something you shouldn't to a voting machine, would it be more convenient to do it to each of the 4000 machines, or just come in here and deal with all of them at once?"

"What surprises people is that the central tabulator is just a PC, like what you and I use. It's just a regular computer."

"So," Dean said, "anybody who can hack into a PC can hack into a central tabulator?"

Harris nodded affirmation, and pointed out how Diebold uses a program called GEMS, which fills the screen of the PC and effectively turns it into the central tabulator system.

"This is the official program that the County Supervisor sees," she said, pointing to a PC that was sitting between them loaded with Diebold's software.

Bev then had Dean open the GEMS program to see the results of a test election.

They went to the screen titled "Election Summary Report" and waited a moment while the PC "adds up all the votes from all the various precincts," and then saw that in this faux election Howard Dean had 1000 votes, Lex Luthor had 500, and Tiger Woods had none.

Dean was winning.

"Of course, you can't tamper with this software," Harris noted.

Diebold wrote a pretty good program.

But, it's running on a Windows PC.

So Harris had Dean close the Diebold GEMS software, go back to the normal Windows PC desktop, click on the "My Computer" icon, choose "Local Disk C:," open the folder titled GEMS, and open the sub-folder "LocalDB" which, Harris noted, "stands for local database, that's where they keep the votes."

Harris then had Dean double-click on a file in that folder titled

"Central Tabulator Votes," which caused the PC to open the vote count in a database program like Excel.

In the "Sum of the Candidates" row of numbers, she found that in one precinct Dean had received 800 votes and Lex Luthor had gotten 400.

"Let's just flip those," Harris said, as Dean cut and pasted the numbers from one cell into the other.

"And," she added magnanimously, "let's give 100 votes to Tiger."

They closed the database, went back into the official GEMS software "the legitimate way, you're the county supervisor and you're checking on the progress of your election."

As the screen displayed the official voter tabulation, Harris said,

"And you can see now that Howard Dean has only 500 votes, Lex Luthor has 900, and Tiger Woods has 100."

Dean, the winner, was now the loser.

Harris sat up a bit straighter, smiled, and said, "We just edited an election, and it took us 90 seconds."

On live national television. (You can see the clip on www.votergate.tv.)

Which brings us back to Morris and those pesky exit polls that had Karen Hughes telling George W. Bush that he'd lost the election in a landslide.

Morris's conspiracy theory is that the exit polls "were sabotage" to cause people in the western states to not bother voting for Bush, since the networks would call the election based on the exit polls for Kerry.

But the networks didn't do that, and had never intended to.

It makes far more sense that the exit polls were right - they weren't done on Diebold PCs - and that the vote itself was hacked.

And not only for the presidential candidate - Jeff Fisher thinks this hit him and pretty much every other Democratic candidate for national office in the most-hacked swing states.

So far, the only national "mainstream" media to come close to this story was Keith Olbermann on his show Friday night, November 5th, when he noted that it was curious that all the voting machine irregularities so far uncovered seem to favor Bush.

In the meantime, the Washington Post and other media are now going through single-bullet-theory-like contortions to explain how the exit polls had failed.

But I agree with Fox's Dick Morris on this one, at least in large part.

Wrapping up his story for The Hill, Morris wrote in his final paragraph, "This was no mere mistake. Exit polls cannot be as wrong across the board as they were on election night. I suspect foul play."

MMMFGKTDA,

So... How does that 'compare' with the "Realities" of the Real World ?

*  Where 10% of the Population of Capitalist America (USofA) lives at the so called 'poverty level' ?

*  Where 90% of the Population of Communist China (PRC) lives in "Real" Poverty ?

No.  We don't have to do that either.  The corrupt machine politics of the Boss Tweed era ended because more and more citizens DIDN'T accept the results of democrat-machine elections.

That's what's going to happen this time too, fascist.  Only this time it's the right wing that's gaming the system.  And every legal means of opposition to every single move of the right wing is exactly what's going to bring your behemoth down.

Jennie,
First off, congratulations!

You might want to see if there are many 220 MHz repeaters in your area - if so I recommend the Kenwood TH-F6 as it has 2 meters, 220 and 440. Not as 'bullet proof' regarding intermod as some dual band radio's I've had but that is also due to it's wideband receive (100 KHz to 1.3 GHz).

As to dual-band radios I've had decent luck with a Yaesu FT-50, it has been dropped on hard surfaces (not intentially) bounced around in a backpack and even rained on and it still works.  I've not used Icom HT's but have an R2 scanner and R75 receiver and am pleased with their performance as well.  Each of the "Big 3" (Icom, Kenwood, Yaesu) have their own scheme for operating controls - as well as champions & detractors.  If you can shop locally then do so as it will give you a chance to play around with the various manufacturer's models and allow you to decide which one 'feels best' in your hand - and don't forget to ask to see the manual to figure out which one's operating scheme and instructions are easiest to deal with.

My advice follow's Steve's regarding batteries - don't spend money on an extra NiMH battery, check which ones take an "AA" pack and also check the instructions for how much power is available on that pack. For instance, the Yaesu FT-50 puts out 2 - 21/2 watts on teh "AA" pack whereas the Kenwood TH-F6 only puts out 1/2 watt.

Again, congratulations & enjoy the hobby,
Howard

No.  By the dictionary definition and, more importantly, by Mussolini's definition.  You're supporting a fascist regime, that makes you either a moron or a fascist.

so what, fascist?  A majority isn't a mandate.

Evidence Mounts That The Vote Was Hacked

by Thom Hartmann

When I spoke with Jeff Fisher this morning (Saturday, November 06, 2004), the Democratic candidate for the U.S. House of Representatives from Florida's 16th District said he was waiting for the FBI to show up.

Fisher has evidence, he says, not only that the Florida election was hacked, but of who hacked it and how.

And not just this year, he said, but that these same people had previously hacked the Democratic primary race in 2002 so that Jeb Bush would not have to run against Janet Reno, who presented a real threat to Jeb, but instead against Bill McBride, who Jeb beat.

"It was practice for a national effort," Fisher told me.

And evidence is accumulating that the national effort happened on November 2, 2004.

The State of Florida, for example, publishes a county-by-county record of votes cast and people registered to vote by party affiliation.

Net denizen Kathy Dopp compiled the official state information into a table, available at http://ustogether.org/Florida_Election.htm, and noticed something startling.

While the heavily scrutinized touch-screen voting machines seemed to produce results in which the registered Democrat/Republican ratios matched the Kerry/Bush vote, and so did the optically-scanned paper ballots in the larger counties, in Florida's smaller counties the results from the optically scanned paper ballots - fed into a central tabulator PC and thus vulnerable to hacking - seem to have been reversed.

In Baker County, for example, with 12,887 registered voters, 69.3% of them Democrats and 24.3% of them Republicans, the vote was only 2,180 for Kerry and 7,738 for Bush, the opposite of what is seen everywhere else in the country where registered Democrats largely voted for Kerry.

In Dixie County, with 4,988 registered voters, 77.5% of them Democrats and a mere 15% registered as Republicans, only 1,959 people voted for Kerry, but 4,433 voted for Bush.

The pattern repeats over and over again - but only in the smaller counties where, it was probably assumed, the small voter numbers wouldn't be much noticed.

Franklin County, 77.3% registered Democrats, went 58.5% for Bush.

Holmes County, 72.7% registered Democrats, went 77.25% for Bush.

Yet in the larger counties, where such anomalies would be more obvious to the news media, high percentages of registered Democrats equaled high percentages of votes for Kerry.

More visual analysis of the results can be seen at http://ustogether.org/election04/FloridaDataStats.htm, and www.rubberbug.com/temp/Florida2004chart.htm.

And, although elections officials didn't notice these anomalies, in aggregate they were enough to swing Florida from Kerry to Bush.

If you simply go through the analysis of these counties and reverse the "anomalous" numbers in those counties that appear to have been hacked, suddenly the Florida election results resemble the Florida exit poll results:

Kerry won, and won big.

Those exit poll results have been a problem for reporters ever since Election Day.

Election night, I'd been doing live election coverage for WDEV, one of the radio stations that carries my syndicated show, and, just after midnight, during the 12:20 a.m. Associated Press Radio News feed, I was startled to hear the reporter detail how Karen Hughes had earlier sat George W. Bush down to inform him that he'd lost the election.

The exit polls were clear: Kerry was winning in a landslide.

"Bush took the news stoically," noted the AP report.

But then the computers reported something different.

In several pivotal states.

Conservatives see a conspiracy here: They think the exit polls were rigged.

Dick Morris, the infamous political consultant to the first Clinton campaign who became a Republican consultant and Fox News regular, wrote an article for The Hill, the publication read by every political junkie in Washington, DC, in which he made a couple of brilliant points.

"Exit Polls are almost never wrong," Morris wrote.

"They eliminate the two major potential fallacies in survey research by correctly separating actual voters from those who pretend they will cast ballots but never do and by substituting actual observation for guesswork in judging the relative turnout of different parts of the state."

He added:

"So, according to ABC-TVs exit polls, for example, Kerry was slated to carry Florida, Ohio, New Mexico, Colorado, Nevada, and Iowa, all of which Bush carried. The only swing state the network had going to Bush was West Virginia, which the president won by 10 points."

Yet a few hours after the exit polls were showing a clear Kerry sweep, as the computerized vote numbers began to come in from the various states the election was called for Bush.

How could this happen?

On the CNBC TV show "Topic A With Tina Brown," several months ago, Howard Dean had filled in for Tina Brown as guest host.

His guest was Bev Harris, the Seattle grandmother who started www.blackboxvoting.org from her living room.

Bev pointed out that regardless of how votes were tabulated (other than hand counts, only done in odd places like small towns in Vermont), the real "counting" is done by computers.

Be they Diebold Opti-Scan machines, which read paper ballots filled in by pencil or ink in the voter's hand, or the scanners that read punch cards, or the machines that simply record a touch of the screen, in all cases the final tally is sent to a "central tabulator" machine.

That central tabulator computer is a Windows-based PC.

"In a voting system," Harris explained to Dean on national television, "you have all the different voting machines at all the different polling places, sometimes, as in a county like mine, there's a thousand polling places in a single county. All those machines feed into the one machine so it can add up all the votes. So, of course, if you were going to do something you shouldn't to a voting machine, would it be more convenient to do it to each of the 4000 machines, or just come in here and deal with all of them at once?"

"What surprises people is that the central tabulator is just a PC, like what you and I use. It's just a regular computer."

"So," Dean said, "anybody who can hack into a PC can hack into a central tabulator?"

Harris nodded affirmation, and pointed out how Diebold uses a program called GEMS, which fills the screen of the PC and effectively turns it into the central tabulator system.

"This is the official program that the County Supervisor sees," she said, pointing to a PC that was sitting between them loaded with Diebold's software.

Bev then had Dean open the GEMS program to see the results of a test election.

They went to the screen titled "Election Summary Report" and waited a moment while the PC "adds up all the votes from all the various precincts," and then saw that in this faux election Howard Dean had 1000 votes, Lex Luthor had 500, and Tiger Woods had none.

Dean was winning.

"Of course, you can't tamper with this software," Harris noted.

Diebold wrote a pretty good program.

But, it's running on a Windows PC.

So Harris had Dean close the Diebold GEMS software, go back to the normal Windows PC desktop, click on the "My Computer" icon, choose "Local Disk C:," open the folder titled GEMS, and open the sub-folder "LocalDB" which, Harris noted, "stands for local database, that's where they keep the votes."

Harris then had Dean double-click on a file in that folder titled "Central Tabulator Votes," which caused the PC to open the vote count in a database program like Excel.

In the "Sum of the Candidates" row of numbers, she found that in one precinct Dean had received 800 votes and Lex Luthor had gotten 400.

"Let's just flip those," Harris said, as Dean cut and pasted the numbers from one cell into the other.

"And," she added magnanimously, "let's give 100 votes to Tiger."

They closed the database, went back into the official GEMS software "the legitimate way, you're the county supervisor and you're checking on the progress of your election."

As the screen displayed the official voter tabulation, Harris said,

"And you can see now that Howard Dean has only 500 votes, Lex Luthor has 900, and Tiger Woods has 100."

Dean, the winner, was now the loser.

Harris sat up a bit straighter, smiled, and said, "We just edited an election, and it took us 90 seconds."

On live national television. (You can see the clip on www.votergate.tv.)

Which brings us back to Morris and those pesky exit polls that had Karen Hughes telling George W. Bush that he'd lost the election in a landslide.

Morris's conspiracy theory is that the exit polls "were sabotage" to cause people in the western states to not bother voting for Bush, since the networks would call the election based on the exit polls for Kerry.

But the networks didn't do that, and had never intended to.

It makes far more sense that the exit polls were right - they weren't done on Diebold PCs - and that the vote itself was hacked.

And not only for the presidential candidate - Jeff Fisher thinks this hit him and pretty much every other Democratic candidate for national office in the most-hacked swing states.

So far, the only national "mainstream" media to come close to this story was Keith Olbermann on his show Friday night, November 5th, when he noted that it was curious that all the voting machine irregularities so far uncovered seem to favor Bush.

In the meantime, the Washington Post and other media are now going through single-bullet-theory-like contortions to explain how the exit polls had failed.

But I agree with Fox's Dick Morris on this one, at least in large part.

Wrapping up his story for The Hill, Morris wrote in his final paragraph, "This was no mere mistake. Exit polls cannot be as wrong across the board as they were on election night. I suspect foul play."

1. I see you've admitted you were lying about Kerry
2. Bush snuck in on the smallest margin since Wilson, fascist.  And the only way he could do it was with hacking the vote and a massive drive at voter suppression.

Be happy.

Evidence Mounts That The Vote Was Hacked

by Thom Hartmann

When I spoke with Jeff Fisher this morning (Saturday, November 06, 2004), the Democratic candidate for the U.S. House of Representatives from Florida's 16th District said he was waiting for the FBI to show up.

Fisher has evidence, he says, not only that the Florida election was hacked, but of who hacked it and how.

And not just this year, he said, but that these same people had previously hacked the Democratic primary race in 2002 so that Jeb Bush would not have to run against Janet Reno, who presented a real threat to Jeb, but instead against Bill McBride, who Jeb beat.

"It was practice for a national effort," Fisher told me.

And evidence is accumulating that the national effort happened on November 2, 2004.

The State of Florida, for example, publishes a county-by-county record of votes cast and people registered to vote by party affiliation.

Net denizen Kathy Dopp compiled the official state information into a table, available at http://ustogether.org/Florida_Election.htm, and noticed something startling.

While the heavily scrutinized touch-screen voting machines seemed to produce results in which the registered Democrat/Republican ratios matched the Kerry/Bush vote, and so did the optically-scanned paper ballots in the larger counties, in Florida's smaller counties the results from the optically scanned paper ballots - fed into a central tabulator PC and thus vulnerable to hacking - seem to have been reversed.

In Baker County, for example, with 12,887 registered voters, 69.3% of them Democrats and 24.3% of them Republicans, the vote was only 2,180 for Kerry and 7,738 for Bush, the opposite of what is seen everywhere else in the country where registered Democrats largely voted for Kerry.

In Dixie County, with 4,988 registered voters, 77.5% of them Democrats and a mere 15% registered as Republicans, only 1,959 people voted for Kerry, but 4,433 voted for Bush.

The pattern repeats over and over again - but only in the smaller counties where, it was probably assumed, the small voter numbers wouldn't be much noticed.

Franklin County, 77.3% registered Democrats, went 58.5% for Bush.

Holmes County, 72.7% registered Democrats, went 77.25% for Bush.

Yet in the larger counties, where such anomalies would be more obvious to the news media, high percentages of registered Democrats equaled high percentages of votes for Kerry.

More visual analysis of the results can be seen at http://ustogether.org/election04/FloridaDataStats.htm, and www.rubberbug.com/temp/Florida2004chart.htm.

And, although elections officials didn't notice these anomalies, in aggregate they were enough to swing Florida from Kerry to Bush.

If you simply go through the analysis of these counties and reverse the "anomalous" numbers in those counties that appear to have been hacked, suddenly the Florida election results resemble the Florida exit poll results:

Kerry won, and won big.

Those exit poll results have been a problem for reporters ever since Election Day.

Election night, I'd been doing live election coverage for WDEV, one of the radio stations that carries my syndicated show, and, just after midnight, during the 12:20 a.m. Associated Press Radio News feed, I was startled to hear the reporter detail how Karen Hughes had earlier sat George W. Bush down to inform him that he'd lost the election.

The exit polls were clear: Kerry was winning in a landslide.

"Bush took the news stoically," noted the AP report.

But then the computers reported something different.

In several pivotal states.

Conservatives see a conspiracy here: They think the exit polls were rigged.

Dick Morris, the infamous political consultant to the first Clinton campaign who became a Republican consultant and Fox News regular, wrote an article for The Hill, the publication read by every political junkie in Washington, DC, in which he made a couple of brilliant points.

"Exit Polls are almost never wrong," Morris wrote.

"They eliminate the two major potential fallacies in survey research by correctly separating actual voters from those who pretend they will cast ballots but never do and by substituting actual observation for guesswork in judging the relative turnout of different parts of the state."

He added:

"So, according to ABC-TVs exit polls, for example, Kerry was slated to carry Florida, Ohio, New Mexico, Colorado, Nevada, and Iowa, all of which Bush carried. The only swing state the network had going to Bush was West Virginia, which the president won by 10 points."

Yet a few hours after the exit polls were showing a clear Kerry sweep, as the computerized vote numbers began to come in from the various states the election was called for Bush.

How could this happen?

On the CNBC TV show "Topic A With Tina Brown," several months ago, Howard Dean had filled in for Tina Brown as guest host.

His guest was Bev Harris, the Seattle grandmother who started www.blackboxvoting.org from her living room.

Bev pointed out that regardless of how votes were tabulated (other than hand counts, only done in odd places like small towns in Vermont), the real "counting" is done by computers.

Be they Diebold Opti-Scan machines, which read paper ballots filled in by pencil or ink in the voter's hand, or the scanners that read punch cards, or the machines that simply record a touch of the screen, in all cases the final tally is sent to a "central tabulator" machine.

That central tabulator computer is a Windows-based PC.

"In a voting system," Harris explained to Dean on national television, "you have all the different voting machines at all the different polling places, sometimes, as in a county like mine, there's a thousand polling places in a single county. All those machines feed into the one machine so it can add up all the votes. So, of course, if you were going to do something you shouldn't to a voting machine, would it be more convenient to do it to each of the 4000 machines, or just come in here and deal with all of them at once?"

"What surprises people is that the central tabulator is just a PC, like what you and I use. It's just a regular computer."

"So," Dean said, "anybody who can hack into a PC can hack into a central tabulator?"

Harris nodded affirmation, and pointed out how Diebold uses a program called GEMS, which fills the screen of the PC and effectively turns it into the central tabulator system.

"This is the official program that the County Supervisor sees," she said, pointing to a PC that was sitting between them loaded with Diebold's software.

Bev then had Dean open the GEMS program to see the results of a test election.

They went to the screen titled "Election Summary Report" and waited a moment while the PC "adds up all the votes from all the various precincts," and then saw that in this faux election Howard Dean had 1000 votes, Lex Luthor had 500, and Tiger Woods had none.

Dean was winning.

"Of course, you can't tamper with this software," Harris noted.

Diebold wrote a pretty good program.

But, it's running on a Windows PC.

So Harris had Dean close the Diebold GEMS software, go back to the normal Windows PC desktop, click on the "My Computer" icon, choose "Local Disk C:," open the folder titled GEMS, and open the sub-folder "LocalDB" which, Harris noted, "stands for local database, that's where they keep the votes."

Harris then had Dean double-click on a file in that folder titled "Central Tabulator Votes," which caused the PC to open the vote count in a database program like Excel.

In the "Sum of the Candidates" row of numbers, she found that in one precinct Dean had received 800 votes and Lex Luthor had gotten 400.

"Let's just flip those," Harris said, as Dean cut and pasted the numbers from one cell into the other.

"And," she added magnanimously, "let's give 100 votes to Tiger."

They closed the database, went back into the official GEMS software "the legitimate way, you're the county supervisor and you're checking on the progress of your election."

As the screen displayed the official voter tabulation, Harris said,

"And you can see now that Howard Dean has only 500 votes, Lex Luthor has 900, and Tiger Woods has 100."

Dean, the winner, was now the loser.

Harris sat up a bit straighter, smiled, and said, "We just edited an election, and it took us 90 seconds."

On live national television. (You can see the clip on www.votergate.tv.)

Which brings us back to Morris and those pesky exit polls that had Karen Hughes telling George W. Bush that he'd lost the election in a landslide.

Morris's conspiracy theory is that the exit polls "were sabotage" to cause people in the western states to not bother voting for Bush, since the networks would call the election based on the exit polls for Kerry.

But the networks didn't do that, and had never intended to.

It makes far more sense that the exit polls were right - they weren't done on Diebold PCs - and that the vote itself was hacked.

And not only for the presidential candidate - Jeff Fisher thinks this hit him and pretty much every other Democratic candidate for national office in the most-hacked swing states.

So far, the only national "mainstream" media to come close to this story was Keith Olbermann on his show Friday night, November 5th, when he noted that it was curious that all the voting machine irregularities so far uncovered seem to favor Bush.

In the meantime, the Washington Post and other media are now going through single-bullet-theory-like contortions to explain how the exit polls had failed.

But I agree with Fox's Dick Morris on this one, at least in large part.

Wrapping up his story for The Hill, Morris wrote in his final paragraph, "This was no mere mistake. Exit polls cannot be as wrong across the board as they were on election night. I suspect foul play."

The EIBI logs (http://www.eibi.de.vu/) are as good as anything, and better than most.  Aside from them, ILG is still probably the best second choice - all the others come off the presses noticeably innaccurate, or are updated too seldom.

Some DX'ers publish on the web very extensive logs for a perticular section of the band (like tropicals) that are even more in depth - that takes some hunting around, though.

Techs have all of the following privileges:

6 Meters

All Amateurs except Novices:
50.0-50.1 MHz: CW Only
50.1-54.0 MHz: CW, Phone, Image, MCW, RTTY/Data

2 Meters

All Amateurs except Novices:
144.0-144.1 MHz: CW Only
144.1-148.0 MHz: CW, Phone, Image, MCW, RTTY/Data

1.25 Meters
The FCC has allocated 219-220 MHz to amateur use on a secondary basis. This allocation is only for fixed digital message forwarding systems operated by all licensees except Novices. Amateur operations must not cause interference to, and must accept interference from, primary services in this and adjacent bands. Amateur stations are limited to 50 W PEP output and 100 kHz bandwidth. Automated Maritime Telecommunications Systems (AMTS) stations are the primary occupants in this band. Amateur stations within 398 miles of an AMTS station must notify the station in writing at least 30 days prior to beginning operations. Amateur stations within 50 miles of an AMTS station must get permission in writing from the AMTS station before beginning operations. ARRL Headquarters maintains a database of AMTS stations. The FCC requires that amateur operators provide written notification including the station's geographic location to the ARRL for inclusion in a database at least 30 days before beginning operations. See Section 97.303(e) of the FCC Rules.

Novice (Novices are limited to 25 watts PEP output), Technician, Technician Plus, General, Advanced, Amateur Extra classes:
222.00-225.00 MHz: CW, Phone, Image, MCW, RTTY/Data
70 Centimeters

All Amateurs except Novices:
420.0-450.0 MHz: CW, Phone, Image, MCW, RTTY/Data
33 Centimeters

All Amateurs except Novices:

23 Centimeters

Novice class:
1270-1295 MHz: CW, phone, Image, MCW, RTTY/Data (maximum power, 5 watts PEP)

All Amateurs except Novices:
1240-1300 MHz: CW, Phone, Image, MCW, RTTY/Data
Higher Frequencies:

All modes and licensees (except Novices) are authorized on the following bands [FCC Rules, Part 97.301(a)]:

2300-2310 MHz
2390-2450 MHz
3300-3500 MHz
5650-5925 MHz
10.0-10.5 GHz
24.0-24.25 GHz
47.0-47.2 GHz
75.5-81.0 GHz*
119.98-120.02 GHz
142-149 GHz
241-250 GHz
All above 300 GHz
2M that is 144 to 148 MHz is the mostly commonly used followed by 440 MHz band (70cm)
In a nutshell -- all authorized frequencies from 50 MHz (6M) and up

That bandplan is outdated. There is no longer a novice class, all novices were upgraded to technicians. Techs have all priveledges above 50 MHz.

I'm not sure how all that works out though, as the FCC still lists the Novice Class license, see:

http://www.arrl.org/fcc/stats.html

Data as of 5 November.

I seem to remember the castaways doing something to recharge the batteries.
Didn't the professor have something where they used coconuts or something?

And you're assumption that they were thousands of miles away might not be right.  Look at the evidence:

-- they had a plain, vanilla AM radio
-- stations came in clear as a bell

Maybe they were only stranded 50 or 100 miles away from Oahu!

You are right. I had always assumed that novices became technicians. But actually tech plusses before 1987 became generals. I found this http://www.arrl.org/news/restructuring/faq.html about the restructuring.

Evidence Mounts That The Vote Was Hacked

by Thom Hartmann

When I spoke with Jeff Fisher this morning (Saturday, November 06, 2004), the Democratic candidate for the U.S. House of Representatives from Florida's 16th District said he was waiting for the FBI to show up.

Fisher has evidence, he says, not only that the Florida election was hacked, but of who hacked it and how.

And not just this year, he said, but that these same people had previously hacked the Democratic primary race in 2002 so that Jeb Bush would not have to run against Janet Reno, who presented a real threat to Jeb, but instead against Bill McBride, who Jeb beat.

"It was practice for a national effort," Fisher told me.

And evidence is accumulating that the national effort happened on November 2, 2004.

The State of Florida, for example, publishes a county-by-county record of votes cast and people registered to vote by party affiliation.

Net denizen Kathy Dopp compiled the official state information into a table, available at http://ustogether.org/Florida_Election.htm, and noticed something startling.

While the heavily scrutinized touch-screen voting machines seemed to produce results in which the registered Democrat/Republican ratios matched the Kerry/Bush vote, and so did the optically-scanned paper ballots in the larger counties, in Florida's smaller counties the results from the optically scanned paper ballots - fed into a central tabulator PC and thus vulnerable to hacking - seem to have been reversed.

In Baker County, for example, with 12,887 registered voters, 69.3% of them Democrats and 24.3% of them Republicans, the vote was only 2,180 for Kerry and 7,738 for Bush, the opposite of what is seen everywhere else in the country where registered Democrats largely voted for Kerry.

In Dixie County, with 4,988 registered voters, 77.5% of them Democrats and a mere 15% registered as Republicans, only 1,959 people voted for Kerry, but 4,433 voted for Bush.

The pattern repeats over and over again - but only in the smaller counties where, it was probably assumed, the small voter numbers wouldn't be much noticed.

Franklin County, 77.3% registered Democrats, went 58.5% for Bush.

Holmes County, 72.7% registered Democrats, went 77.25% for Bush.

Yet in the larger counties, where such anomalies would be more obvious to the news media, high percentages of registered Democrats equaled high percentages of votes for Kerry.

More visual analysis of the results can be seen at http://ustogether.org/election04/FloridaDataStats.htm, and www.rubberbug.com/temp/Florida2004chart.htm.

And, although elections officials didn't notice these anomalies, in aggregate they were enough to swing Florida from Kerry to Bush.

If you simply go through the analysis of these counties and reverse the "anomalous" numbers in those counties that appear to have been hacked, suddenly the Florida election results resemble the Florida exit poll results:

Kerry won, and won big.

Those exit poll results have been a problem for reporters ever since Election Day.

Election night, I'd been doing live election coverage for WDEV, one of the radio stations that carries my syndicated show, and, just after midnight, during the 12:20 a.m. Associated Press Radio News feed, I was startled to hear the reporter detail how Karen Hughes had earlier sat George W. Bush down to inform him that he'd lost the election.

The exit polls were clear: Kerry was winning in a landslide.

"Bush took the news stoically," noted the AP report.

But then the computers reported something different.

In several pivotal states.

Conservatives see a conspiracy here: They think the exit polls were rigged.

Dick Morris, the infamous political consultant to the first Clinton campaign who became a Republican consultant and Fox News regular, wrote an article for The Hill, the publication read by every political junkie in Washington, DC, in which he made a couple of brilliant points.

"Exit Polls are almost never wrong," Morris wrote.

"They eliminate the two major potential fallacies in survey research by correctly separating actual voters from those who pretend they will cast ballots but never do and by substituting actual observation for guesswork in judging the relative turnout of different parts of the state."

He added:

"So, according to ABC-TVs exit polls, for example, Kerry was slated to carry Florida, Ohio, New Mexico, Colorado, Nevada, and Iowa, all of which Bush carried. The only swing state the network had going to Bush was West Virginia, which the president won by 10 points."

Yet a few hours after the exit polls were showing a clear Kerry sweep, as the computerized vote numbers began to come in from the various states the election was called for Bush.

How could this happen?

On the CNBC TV show "Topic A With Tina Brown," several months ago, Howard Dean had filled in for Tina Brown as guest host.

His guest was Bev Harris, the Seattle grandmother who started www.blackboxvoting.org from her living room.

Bev pointed out that regardless of how votes were tabulated (other than hand counts, only done in odd places like small towns in Vermont), the real "counting" is done by computers.

Be they Diebold Opti-Scan machines, which read paper ballots filled in by pencil or ink in the voter's hand, or the scanners that read punch cards, or the machines that simply record a touch of the screen, in all cases the final tally is sent to a "central tabulator" machine.

That central tabulator computer is a Windows-based PC.

"In a voting system," Harris explained to Dean on national television, "you have all the different voting machines at all the different polling places, sometimes, as in a county like mine, there's a thousand polling places in a single county. All those machines feed into the one machine so it can add up all the votes. So, of course, if you were going to do something you shouldn't to a voting machine, would it be more convenient to do it to each of the 4000 machines, or just come in here and deal with all of them at once?"

"What surprises people is that the central tabulator is just a PC, like what you and I use. It's just a regular computer."

"So," Dean said, "anybody who can hack into a PC can hack into a central tabulator?"

Harris nodded affirmation, and pointed out how Diebold uses a program called GEMS, which fills the screen of the PC and effectively turns it into the central tabulator system.

"This is the official program that the County Supervisor sees," she said, pointing to a PC that was sitting between them loaded with Diebold's software.

Bev then had Dean open the GEMS program to see the results of a test election.

They went to the screen titled "Election Summary Report" and waited a moment while the PC "adds up all the votes from all the various precincts," and then saw that in this faux election Howard Dean had 1000 votes, Lex Luthor had 500, and Tiger Woods had none.

Dean was winning.

"Of course, you can't tamper with this software," Harris noted.

Diebold wrote a pretty good program.

But, it's running on a Windows PC.

So Harris had Dean close the Diebold GEMS software, go back to the normal Windows PC desktop, click on the "My Computer" icon, choose "Local Disk C:," open the folder titled GEMS, and open the sub-folder "LocalDB" which, Harris noted, "stands for local database, that's where they keep the votes."

Harris then had Dean double-click on a file in that folder titled "Central Tabulator Votes," which caused the PC to open the vote count in a database program like Excel.

In the "Sum of the Candidates" row of numbers, she found that in one precinct Dean had received 800 votes and Lex Luthor had gotten 400.

"Let's just flip those," Harris said, as Dean cut and pasted the numbers from one cell into the other.

"And," she added magnanimously, "let's give 100 votes to Tiger."

They closed the database, went back into the official GEMS software "the legitimate way, you're the county supervisor and you're checking on the progress of your election."

As the screen displayed the official voter tabulation, Harris said,

"And you can see now that Howard Dean has only 500 votes, Lex Luthor has 900, and Tiger Woods has 100."

Dean, the winner, was now the loser.

Harris sat up a bit straighter, smiled, and said, "We just edited an election, and it took us 90 seconds."

On live national television. (You can see the clip on www.votergate.tv.)

Which brings us back to Morris and those pesky exit polls that had Karen Hughes telling George W. Bush that he'd lost the election in a landslide.

Morris's conspiracy theory is that the exit polls "were sabotage" to cause people in the western states to not bother voting for Bush, since the networks would call the election based on the exit polls for Kerry.

But the networks didn't do that, and had never intended to.

It makes far more sense that the exit polls were right - they weren't done on Diebold PCs - and that the vote itself was hacked.

And not only for the presidential candidate - Jeff Fisher thinks this hit him and pretty much every other Democratic candidate for national office in the most-hacked swing states.

So far, the only national "mainstream" media to come close to this story was Keith Olbermann on his show Friday night, November 5th, when he noted that it was curious that all the voting machine irregularities so far uncovered seem to favor Bush.

In the meantime, the Washington Post and other media are now going through single-bullet-theory-like contortions to explain how the exit polls had failed.

But I agree with Fox's Dick Morris on this one, at least in large part.

Wrapping up his story for The Hill, Morris wrote in his final paragraph, "This was no mere mistake. Exit polls cannot be as wrong across the board as they were on election night. I suspect foul play."

I guess this statement at the bottom of that page says it all:

rather help out a local ham/swl before spinning the roulette wheel.

Please don't feed the trolls..

As for "native Americans," I'm one and really don't give damn about 200+ years ago. It's better to thrive in the contemporary society than lament about the past one. I'm sure many "native Americans" are not complaining about the free ride on university education and medical benefits as well. I wonder if there are any "native American" shortwave broadcast? Radio Cherokee International or the Voice of Radio Sioux :) :)

Of note, verticals will usually work better for the further DX (low angle) signals coming in than the horizontal antenna configurations. Horizontal wires are nice for lower noise, at times, and for those stations that aren't a long ways away.

First you didnt address which argument was 'wrong' and you didnt refute it. Address it and stop name-calling. Tell me if you can't handle these undisputed arguments.

He did get warnings that Al-Qaida was a huge threat/plane attacks. He didnt go in with an exit strategy depsite several Top Generals warning otherwise. His job plan is behind predictions. And the yellowcake documents were fakes.

John probably doesn't understand that.  He's been working on his goose-step for years.

There is also the disturbing tendency to insert theocratic principles into the vision of America's role in the world.
 There is evil in the world. Nowhere in our Constitution or founding documents is there support for the proposition that the United States was given a special dispensation to eliminate it.
 Surely Saddam Hussein was an evil dictator. But there are quite a few of those still around and no one is advocating eliminating them.
 Neither Washington, Adams, Madison nor Jefferson saw America as the world's avenging angel. Any notion of going abroad seeking demons to destroy concerned them above all else.
Mr. Bush's venture into crusaderism frightened not only Muslims, it also frightened a very large number of Americans with a sense of their own history.

That's why it should be mandatory to remove all doubt about how many people would have voted for whom. 40% that didn't vote is way too high and the fact that the system is totally incapable of handling an additional 40% of voters doesn't inspire confidence either.

Actually the American public lost by not having a truly decisive election in which ALL eligible voters participated.
It merely raises questions in peoples minds about the nature of the US democracy and whether it's real.

Yes, it concerned them from the Halls of Montezuma to the Shores of

Do you think the women of Afghanistan are talking about our "venture

What sense of what history would that be?

Agreed.  What the right has accomplished in this election is to bring the question of whether this country really is a constitutional republic to the forefront of people's minds.

And there will ultimately be hell to pay for that.

It also has some of the best quotes of any episode. In one scene when Spock realizes he could have recorded all of earth history from the tricorder play back, he says succinctly, "I am a fool".

thanks. i think i might have found that at one point, but didn't understand what it did.

what's a DX cluster list?

So what was the music they had to replace from the original airing?
It was my understanding they couldn't get rights to for the dvd release.

Wait till the simple minded dummycrat liberals see the edition of Newsweek that will be out soon. Newsweek had reporters imbedded in the election campaign of each party. They were hired as campaign workers and the fact they worked for Newsweek was kept seceret. They were ordered by Newsweek to make no reporting of their observations until after the election. It will reveal what really went on behind the scenes and for the dummycrats it isn't pretty, a total meltdown. Bickering, couldn't decide on a strategy, flip-flopping all over the place. They had to hide Kerry's cell phone from him because he would get all excited about something and call everyone he could think of in an attempt to make up his mind, and even then he couldn't make up his mind, totally indecisive. Teresa getting in the way, and they couldn't get her to keep her big mouth shut.
It will all be revealed.

Try the rec.antiques.radio+phono newsgroup. It is mostly vintage radio but there is often discussion of vintage television.

nah, no need to.  Since the Bush time line so resembles Hitlers and his history, one only needs to wonder.  By the way I see we're doing our Stalingrad thing in Iraq right now.  We might win this one though.
Topo bad the place isn't worth a single American life.

I don't disagree with that.  Bush like Hitler conned the people but the fact remains there are a lot of people fed up with the 2 party system and that's why Nader was running, to protest it.

Hold your breath and stomp your feet and scream out your tantrum, little bushkultie, but it won't make these facts go away.

The bushkultie doesn't really support Bush by wanting Bush to cheat.

The bushkultie knows Bush can't compete fairly.

Well at least you have those 'skills'.

That's not a fitting substitute for awareness or reasoning, though.

"According to the Miami Herald, Florida attempted to revive its felon purge lists in 2004, again rife with inaccuracy, again disproportionately disenfranchising black voters. By the far the worst tactic was revealed by New York Times columnist Bob Herbert, who exposed that the state of Florida was "investigating" get-out-the-vote drives among blacks in Orlando by sending armed police officers into the homes of mostly elderly, African-American citizens who had filed absentee ballots. For someone to authorize the intimidation and terrorization of poor elderly black women who came of age in the midst of the Jim Crow South is about as low as politics can get, and evidence of how much this election means to both sides.

Thanks for posting this.

The bushkultie will whine and cry, and avoid dealing with it, but real Americans, in stark contrast, care deeply about this.

The Bush regime is corrupt and has usurped office.

Bush does his best to emulate his hero Hitler, but he just doesn't have as much of that charisma.  Besides, it's not as if Bush actually got those votes.  He merely cheated.

Bush can't be honest.  He had no way to learn of that.

Notice that the bushkultie can't discern that cheating isn't winning.

It'd require ethics for him to do so, and he has none.

That's why he supports those who rape children.

They elected you posterboy, didn't they.

If you weren't preoccupied with that, you could perhaps learn about reality.

Your fuhrer Bush is a crook.  He's not going to be your mommy for you.

Real Americans support actual democracy.  Bush doesn't.

Real Americans don't support cheating such as that of the Bush regime.

Those who support Bush should want him to be able to win honestly.

All he can do, though, is cheat.

That makes Bush and his fawning pawn kultie the real losers.

It is the ones who vote that decide, the non-voters don't count. The majority of the voters chose Bush. Bush won, Kerry lost...deal with it.

I don't think someone like Jefferson would be electable today in the USA. Far too liberal. He wouldn't be prepared to talk about his religion during an election like your recent two did.   I don't know about the others.

Please keep listening, you are actually quite wrong about Holland following the USA on immigration.  It is the other way around, the USA is following them and most of  Europe.

A a former colonial power, immigration has been a big issue for the Netherlands for at least 40-50 years.  Lots of immigrants from places like Surinam, Curacao and Indonesia. Places that were Dutch colonies.  The proportion of recent immigrants approaches 40% in some communities (by recent, I mean foreign born).  Most of Europe is like this now - birth rate is low, only way to keep up the population is immigration.  Hence the issues with support for both sides of the Israel-Palestine conflict for example.

Lots of radio is available in various parts of the world in indigenous language. I listen to NBC on FM here, that's Northern Broadcasting Corporation, and lots of it is in Dene or Cree. Niwi nihiyawan!

Jefferson would not have been inclined to talk religion during a campaign, true, but he wouldn't have had to.  People would likely have been aware that he was the principle author of this line: "We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights, that among these are Life, Liberty and the pursuit of Happiness."

If anything, the part about being endowed by the Creator would have caused him more electoral problems with today's hard core secularists than accusations of being too liberal.  Once those secularists also learned that he authored a "bible," and said "Of all the systems of morality, ancient or modern, which have come under my observation, none appear to me so pure as that of Jesus,"  he probably would have been classified as a bible thumping evangelical  by the same people who are now denigrating the role of morality in the last election.

this just shows that the College system needs to be replaced by a popular vote with a manditory preferential voting system like they use in Australia

It isn't but to say that Bush has a mandate is opure dishonesty.
Bush, like most presidents since FDR is grossly over stepping the boundries set down by the founding fathers for the office of president.  The arrogant bastard needs to be reeled in.

This is true. The "upper bands" are hopping with auroral propagation. Cloudy here tonight, but we were treated to a grand display of the northern lights last night!

FCC Suspends Amateur Service License Grants to Unsnarl System Snafu

NEWINGTON, CT, Nov 8, 2004--The FCC has stopped issuing Amateur Service license grants while it attempts to unravel an apparent computer programming  glitch. The FCC posted a public alert on the Universal Licensing System (ULS) site on November 5. At this point, no one seems to know when the problem will be fixed.

"The granting of Amateur applications has been temporarily suspended," the FCC announcement says without further explanation. "We apologize for the inconvenience." The Commission has given no indication when processing might resume, but when it does, the FCC likely will pull back more than 125 Group D (2x3) amateur call signs it mistakenly issued out of sequence and grant the applicants new in-sequence call signs. Although they eventually may be set aside and replaced, all call signs showing up in the ULS database remain legal.

The difficulties began October 28, when the FCC implemented a ULS software change that caused applications to be processed improperly. ARRL Volunteer Examiner Coordinator Manager Bart Jahnke, W9JJ, says the FCC was forced to stop processing amateur applications after attempts to correct the initial error only seemed to make things worse. "The FCC is still trying to get its arms around the problems," he said this week.

For some as-yet-undetermined reason the October 28 modification caused all amateur applications from the nation's VECs to be shunted into "Pending 2" status, flagging them for manual review without any justification.

By November 2, the FCC thought it had things under control again, and it reprocessed all the applications in the queue. At first blush, all looked to be in order, Jahnke said, but closer inspection revealed that the system had failed to grant some routine requests for new sequential call signs. "By the afternoon, we realized that the FCC had erroneously begun issuing new Group D call signs in several districts from altogether new call sign blocks--out of sequence from where processing in those districts had last ended," Jahnke said.

While the first and third call districts were unaffected, the FCC apparently jumped from issuing call signs in the KC2Nxx sequence to the WQ2Axx sequence, Jahnke said. It also had assigned WQ4xxx, WQ5xxx, WQ7xxx and WQ9xxx call signs. In the eighth district, there was a gap between KD8xxx to KM8xxx call signs, while in the tenth district the Commission went from KC0Txx to WI0Axx. In the sixth district, the sequence shifted from KG6Wxx to KI6Axx.

The ARRL VEC has been working with personnel in the FCC's licensing branch to identify where the FCC had been in the call sign sequences, where it had jumped to and where it was supposed to be.

Jahnke says the problem appears to have affected only Group D call signs. He emphasized that any call signs the FCC issued are in the ULS database and therefore are valid, and licensees may use them on the air.

"Just don't get too familiar with them," he advised. "It is our understanding that at some point, the FCC will set aside the out-of-sequence grants and issue new call signs to affected licensees."

So what, who's talking about Clinton?
The topic is Bush, stay on topic.

4/5 of the US citizenry did NOT vote for Bush.
What is there to compare?

Hello,

I heard it between 3:00z and 4:00z, I have to check the exact frequency by commutating my receiver in SSB mode (zero beat).  The frequency was exactly 1510 Khz and the 1512 Khz was clear.

I also heard on 1370 Khz a radio in Spanish language From south America.

For the Callsign  I believed to hear initials "WYRT", but I am not sure.

You have that exactly backwards.
This happens mainly to people that derive most of their information from the TV.

The

Those folks are irrelevent, just as Bush is.

Thanks for that, Steve. Great catch, Greece on AM. You may be interested to know that, in the 80's/early 90's (in Scotland), caught quite a few AM stations from the US, Canada, and South America. Remember (gleefully) counting a total of 120 for US/Canada, though my efforts were by no means exceptional. The strongest ones were from the east coast, but managed a few further west, including KMOX St.Louis (1120). Don't think I managed Minnesota, but may give the whole thing a try again this winter. Used to have an amplified loop with positive feedback. Was able to peak weak carriers right out in front of strong ones. Need to rebuild that loop again.

Some people occasionally go on a "DX-pedition" to the north-west coast of Scotland, at Sheigra. Chosen for its isolation from the electrical grid and good locale for the setup of MW beverage antennae. They get quite a number of great results -

http://www.users.waitrose.com/~bdxc/articles.html

Looks like KFAN 1130 Minnesota might be a good one to go for!

Of course, you have the advantage of not having to stay up as late as I have, to get the trans-Atlantic DX. On the other hand, we get to enjoy the "great" climate here. Well, at least it doesn't go "30 below" like over there. That would bother even a hardened Scotsman.

Oh.  I was too brief on my previous reply - like some of Steve's. ;-)

It was a cruel joke on HIM and US.  Someone posted that impersonating him!  Sorry for the oversight previously.

I've gotten several messages "returned" as undeliverable because they contained a virus or worm -- and I never sent the messages.  It appears someone is playing the "blame game" with more than one of us!

If every voter in the nation voted for the same person, that person STILL wouldn't have a mandate.
See if you can figure out why.

Just tuned to 40 and 80 meters and it's a complete washout! Much like daytime propagation, no signals except for a few here and there and those we can hear have very heavy "storm drain pipe" aurora effect on them rendering them almost unintelligible. Even some of the big shortwave guns like WWCR and WBCQ and either gone or very difficult to hear as of 7:10 PM Central Time.    see www.spaceweather.com for some nifty photos of last nite's aurora!

Hi, JuLiE Dxer and all

Yes, it is incredible like you say, I received this radio, with the internal antenna of my receiver Sony 7600G.

By nights of winter it is possible to hear some Medium Wave DX stations from East coast of the United States and South East of South America.
and some managed to hear stations on long wave like "Europe 1" 183Khz and 252Khz Ireland and Algeria.

I even saw an Internet site where somebody of New-Zealand which could hear the sound carrier French television TF1, it is possible to listen to on the site the recording which is very short.

Yes, F4DUK is my amateur radio callsign.

Oui, c'est incroyable comme vous dites j'ai bien entendu cette radio, avec l'antenne interne de mon r�cepteur Sony 7600G.
Il m'arrive les nuits d'hiver d'entendre des stations DX de la c�te EST des �tats-Unis et du SUD EST de l'am�rique du Sud.
Oui, F4DUK est mon indicatif radioamateur
Des amis d'am�rique, m'ont dit qu'ils leur arrivaient d'entendre parfois des stations europ�enne en ondes moyenne.
et certains sont parvenus � entendre des stations en onde longue comme Europe 1 183Khz et 252Khz Ireland and Algeria.

I found he's been playing in these 31 other newsgroup within the last week. Please keep in mind I only spent about 10 minutes tracing his steps. Most often his posts are very unappreciated and quite off topic.

Here's the purchase:

<http://cgi.ebay.com/ws/eBayISAPI.dll?ViewItem&category=4673&item=5728364202>

He took out the options and is selling them individually - and the radio condition has improved from "very good to excellent" to "like new"

Radio

Plus several auctions for the optional crystals.

The bushkultie approves of other crimes besides election fraud.

He also enjoys child rapes, tortures, and other war crimes.

That's the problem for him: he's immoral.

Scott,
With a portable radio 29' is adequate length for an antenna, especially as you are targeting a 'major' broadcaster. You may even discover that you get adequate reception with the whip. Being one to start with simple solutions, so if the whip isn't suitable (and it will limit you to the higher powered broadcasters) I'd suggest running the wire for the antenna - what wire you use isn't critical so if you have that length of speaker cable handy go for it. Next, connect both leads of the 300 ohm cable together at each end; connect the end in the attic to your wire antenna; next get an audio patch cable (phono jack on each end) long enough to reach from the 300 ohm cable outlet to your radio and clip one connector off and strip the jacket and ground cable & connect the inner conductor the the 300 ohm cable. Plug the phono plug into your radio and you're set. The 300 ohm cable is part of the antenna and you are not grounded so you may indeed pick up noise from home electronics & appliances. If so, you will benefit from coax - and to get the full benefit of the shield a suitable ground is needed. Without the ground you may still realize improvement though. At tht point you could use the 300 ohm cable to snake the coax - if it's not stapled to any studs 8-} Again though, try the simplest solution first - if it fills your needs call it a good day & relax while listening to your radio.

Hope this helps & good luck,
Howard

However, Jefferson admitted, "In the New Testament there is internal evidence that parts of it have proceeded from an extraordinary man and that other parts are the fabric of very inferior minds..."

Jefferson also wrote, "The day will come when the mystical generation of Jesus, by the Supreme Being as his Father, in the womb of a virgin, will be classed with the fable of the generation of Minerva in the brain of Jupiter...we may hope that the dawn of reason and freedom of thought in these United States will do away all this..."

If anything, the part about not being Christian would have caused him the most electoral problems with today's USA.

Near-blackout SW reception here for the nights of Mon Nov 8 and Tues Nov 9.
A little bit of opening in the afternoon of Mon Nov 8 for 10 and 15MHz.
It seems that 5MHz is opening up as I post (1AM Wed Nov 10).

that i will be able to hear with my Shortwave Radio ? i have yet to get my ham license so i can get started with some good tx rigs . but im dying to hear some beacons or broadcasts perhaps from an oscar or anythig that may be overhead. . ive got lots of tracking software and i love watching these birds fly over my house at night .. but id love to hear them as well any information would be helpfull especially names and frequencies..

Thx

Of course...but why bother?

You're dealing with a stupid communist.
If you look at the propaganda put ot by both the fake parties you would even think there was a "2"party system.
Kerry the coward cousin,and Germanic Death Cultist Skull and Bones boy used the crooked election machines to steal the nomination from Dean and the commie former Black Panther Marxist turned libertarian /Reganite Republican Horowitz and his pal Rove gave the scream the dirty commie press treatment like you would expect in Russia.
(Theres one party rule there again,Reagan really stopped them eh? Hahahaha)
All Russia did was change it's party name and used the time to reorganize "order out of chaos"  and gave the US new lies for old.
And Russia really won in the long run.
And you have to fight with a stupid communist that thinks it's American and moral because the propaganda machine tells him thats how a good party member should talk.

A good party member would either be duped by Micheal Moore or the phon counter documentaries put out by the Republicommies and never look at the complete picture.

If you're going to use your TV do your own "programming" I always say.

Which is a shame because the Rendon Group creates all this taxpayer funded propaganda to enslave your mind,and the shite is unwatchable.Unless you're a lazy and stupid commie.
Then it's Gospel !

Kelly McGinley -- Wake up America, Communism is Not Dead
WAKE UP AMERICA, COMMUNISM IS NOT DEAD
�
By Kelly McGinley
October 23, 2004
NewsWithViews.com

Recently I reviewed textbooks being considered for adoption by Alabama's textbook committee. I wanted to inform them how important their job was due to the anti American bias in most textbooks.

A product of public schools, I have been working toward personal remedial education, especially as it pertains to the history of America.

Not surprising is that most Americans need remedial education. This came to the light during the Korean War. American soldiers were badly prepared for defending America after they were captured by the Communists. Their captors found torture was not necessary to get information or to influence attitudes. Our young men could not even defend American values and culture. This information from North Korea brought about congressional hearings.

Based on the findings of the armed forces and the U.S. Senate, historian Russell Kirk, was alarmed that most Americans were badly prepared for their task of defending their own convictions, interests and institutions against the grim threat of our nation's enemies. Kirk stated, "And in our age, when all civilization is immediately menaced, good-natured ignorance is a luxury none of us can afford." He wrote a primer called "The American Cause" which the armed forces distributed to our soldiers.

Historian David McCullough issued a warning during recent testimony before a Senate committee hearing. "We are raising a generation of people who are historically illiterate and ignorant of the basic philosophical foundations of our constitutional free society? ? McCullough lambasted the politically correct textbooks being used in elementary, middle and high schools to recast American history as multiculturalist dogma.

One American officer stated that this ignorance is the "Number one social disease of America. Its prevention and its treatment are essential to the continuing survival of our system."

Is this apparent dumbing down an accident or a planned event?

I have been studying the Communist intellectual infiltration into this country. Thanks to Myron Fagan, a play writer in the 40's & 50's, 300 of the most ardent Communist movie stars were flushed out of Hollywood. Many were the most popular of that day. After 3 congressional hearings, congress created a list of 300 communist stars in Hollywood. Ten went to prison, thanks to Representative Parnell Thomas who was the head of the "Committee of Un-American Activities". Because of America's short memory these stars kept returning to America. Ronald Reagan was a part of the whole thing, even being subpoenaed to the hearings in congress. He yelled the loudest that there were no more Communists in Hollywood. This helped lull Americans back to sleep, as if Communist's ever give up. The effects of Hollywood on this country are evident, their motto being "freedom of speech".

What were they trying to do in Hollywood? Make movies applauding Communism at the same time destroying our American Heritage and Christian values and virtues. Movies like "Mission to Moscow" and "Song of Russia".

If it wasn't accidental in Hollywood, there is a good chance it has not been accidental in the public schools.

The same plan from Hollywood was adopted by our public schools. In 1913 the NEA established the "Commission on the Reorganization of Secondary Education". Bulletin 41 states: "It is not so important that the pupil know how the President is elected or that he shall understand the duties of the health officer in his community. The time formerly spent in the effort to understand the process of passing a law under the President's veto is now to be more preferably used in the observation of vocational resources of the community. The committee recommends that social studies in the high school shall include community health, housing, homes, human rights versus property rights,?.the selfish conservatissm of traditions and public utilities."

In 1929 John Dewey, known as the Father of Modern Education and an author of "The Humanist Manifesto", wrote a glowing article about Russian schools having just returned from the Soviet Union. In Dec. 5, 1928, edition of "The New Republic" Dewey described statist schools in Russia as "the marvelous development of progressive educational ideas and practices under the fostering care of the Bolshevist government... the required collectivee and cooperative mentality. The great task of the school is to counteractt and transform those domestic and neighborhood tendencies----the influence of home and Church"

In 1958 President Dwight D. Eisenhower signed the first education agreement with the Soviet Union. Similar agreements have been signed by the Carnegie Corporation and Soviet Academy of Science and President Reagan and Gorbrachov in 1985 which still remain in effect.

The NEA Journal introduced "The New Social Studies" program in 1967. "Probably the most obvious change occurring in the social studies curriculum is breaking away from the traditional dominance of history, geography & civics. Material from the behavioral sciences, sociology, social psychology... are being ng incorporated into both elementary & secondary school programs."

None of these new civic books explains the real reason people come to America. Also not addressed: why we fought the American Revolution, the miracle of the idea of "self government", why they established this republican form of government. There is no mention that it was to protect our God given rights. Why is our country better than any other and founded on the highest principled men of goodwill? Men who had a biblical worldview, who feared God, understood the wickedness of governments. Instead students are taught to be ashamed of our country and our founding fathers.

Evolution is supposed to be taught as a theory. In Alabama there is a disclaimer on the front of all the science books. Today we need a disclaimer on all these textbooks because evolution has been incorporated into every word.

Without any facts to back up this philosophy, evolution has been injected in these books as absolute truth while morality, character, values and ethics are not absolute and can vary. Respect of perversion and behaviors that are still against the law in Alabama abound in all the sociology books.

The psychology books define homophobes as the problem and homosexuality as normal. Sex is taught to children without truth. The pandemic of STD's is kept quiet. The short life span (46 years) of an active homosexual male is not even mentioned.

Alfred Kinsey, a pedophile, is quoted as an expert on sex even though his research is fraudulent and sexually abused babies as young as 5 months old. Family and marriage have been redefined in all the books.

"Sociology" by Holt has a whole subchapter on hate crimes pointing out that white Christians are the main culprits. They even have a map of the U.S. with dots showing places where hate groups are located. It shows many right here in Alabama.

In reviewing these textbooks, I was not surprised to see anti-American, anti-Christian, anti-white man philosophies, while at the same time promoting socialism and Communism.

There is no such thing as a "value free" education. These textbooks shape values and attitudes away from the biblical values. Character, values and ethics are gathered by group consensus instead of presented as absolute, enduring principles from the Creator of the Universe.

In the textbook titled "Sociology & You", publisher Glenco, page 316, they compared our historical patriarchal society to Afghanistan, China and Iraq.
In "Civics" by Davis Fernlund, the white man is a greedy, racist bigot. He instructs, "Freedom is the ability to make choices", that our republic is a democracy and that the duty of citizens is to "attend school". This textbook pits the rich against the poor, black against the white and women against men.
These textbooks are an affront to all the true founding principles of our country. An affront to all the truths we hold dear. That we were created, that we have rights and responsibilities given by our Creator. That there is right and wrong and absolute truth. That Christianity is better than Islam. That self government is better than communism. That no one has the right to do wrong and white man is not more evil than everyone else.
If Representative Parnell Thomas and his committee on un American activities were around today, I believe these textbooks, the authors and publishers would be arrested for treasonous activities.
I encouraged this textbook committee to reject all these books and revisit our textbooks from a generation ago.
Our freedom is not being destroyed by terrorists, but by ignorance, apathy and complacency. Our government schools are to blame because of textbooks like these. Our dumbing down is not accidental but a very well organized plan.

Cite the claim that Kerry stole the nomination.

Maybe the Electors will pick Dean.

I once had a receiver listed for sale on ebay and it did not hit the reserve.  After the auction ended I got an email from buyer gottahaveit1995 asking how much he could buy it for outright.  The second email appeared as this from gottahaveit 1995:

You seem to have a major problem with the concept of the entire electorate turning out to vote. Why is that? Apart from some misguided concept of "liberty" which is far overshadowed by the fact the president only got 32% of the vote BTW...

Hi,

Anyone have the B04 schedules to N. Am. for Radio Kuwait.?

Their web site doesn't have anything in English, and my Arabic isn't too good !

Thanks,
B.

The people that voted for the winner have no right to complain about his future behavior.
Those folks knew very well the history of the winner, so his future actions should come as no surprise.
Non-voters are non-participants in this silly political game and may complain as they please.

Now, you can opine and

This from a person that openly chooses slavery and theft for himself and others.

As you have admitted acceptance of the immoral act of theft, there is little credibility in anything else you may say.

Well, the easy part is that all of the voters lumped together STILL aren't a majority of the US populace.
If every single, solitarity voter voted for the same candidate, you would still have a minority assigning to a majority.
Of course this is never the correct thing to do.

Was pretty bad in Cincy.  Could pull in a few signals, like the BBC and a few others out of relays on this hemisphere, but anything from Europe was pretty much DOA.

I'll never forget how it started in my own case. When I was a kid, an uncle came to visit and after he left I discovered that he'd forgotten to take his small Sony shortwave radio home with him. I remember turning it on and hearing WWV, Radio Moscow and a few other things. I thought it was so interesting that this radio wasn't like any of the other radios we had lying around! Back in those days there were many more numbers stations too. Anyway, I listened to this thing just about every day and night. Eventually my uncle came back for another visit, but when he saw how much I loved the shortwave he conveniently "forgot" it again---as he did on every future visit. He knew I'd been "bitten"! What a great uncle!

Easy.  We're not as gullible as those who choose to believe it nor are we required by our political predisposition to believe anything that rationalizes losing an election.

While the 7030+ is no longer being imported, it's possible they have one left in stock.

Or they may have forgotten to update the page.

November 9, 2004 - The geomagnetic disturbance wasn't bad for everyone, everywhere.  From my QTH near San Francisco, California, about 37.7 degrees N, tropical stations below 5 MHz were popping everywhere.  Most were very weak, which is typical anyway, but there were a lot more of them, and some were surprisingly loud.  Several Brazilians were doing splendidly, and I tripled my lifetime total of Guatemalans, including several easily-heard IDs.

The standout was Radio Verdad, 4052.5 kHz, from Chiquimula, Guatemala. At only 800 watts, this little gem came charging through the scuzz. SINPO = 15231 to 25232, very bad atmospheric noise, but the signal increase was just that tad bigger.  From 0250 until 0325, I was able to copy enough to work up a reception report for potential QSL.

Copied the station playing several numbers from "Prairie Home Companion," with Garrison Keillor's voice wafting through the ether, then onto hymns and evangelical discussion in Spanish. Faded out by 0330, but showed up again about 0545, with playback of an unid EE-language play or interview to 0600.

Also R. Cultural Coatan (also Guatemala) around 0230 with IDs and "Buenas Noches" announcements to sign-off at 0239; some others.

Icom R75, 45-foot random wire phased with 88-foot dipole, about 27' above ground.

That's not really what I said - obviously, other nations have been thinking about it more or less, but Europe (at least parts of it) has been seemingly allowing immigration by Muslims wholeheartedly.
However, with this event, Holland seems to have become galvanized to finally try to reckon with it in such a way that goes beyond what they have so far been willing to try.

Of course, we haven't been trying very hard - our porous borders let through thousands of illegal immigrants every day.  It really needs to change if we're going to get serious.  We'll see.

The fact that assholes like you refuse to put up with any discomfort and sacrifice is the reason we are going down in flames.

That's what you get for listening to corporations instead of scientists. Have a nice trip.

What? You won't be along with the rest of us?

Heading off to the 'Mother Ship'?

LMAO at the oblivious 'tard boy!

Hell, I'm selling them on EBay - - - and they're going to need them.

>Better put it on.

This is the gentlest thing I've said in a month.  Did you not see me out there in the front lines in the week before the election, generously and heroically doing my best to save souls for the Lord, warning them all of the Devil Himelf's ever so seductive little trap - - - "devi"ously tricking them into not only being "fooled once," but now, "fooled twice" into voting FOR the AntiChrist, thus, getting their Eternal Life revoked upon being soon called before The Great Throne of Judgement.

The only thing louder than the thunder will be the gnashing of their teeth.

Can't you just smell their souls fermenting already?

"The Rapture" may be now most effectively and accurately described as "The Rupture."

(It's a bust!)

You know what they say about being fooled twice . . .

"Repent!  The End is near!"

Well, that's not exactly what I said, and I'm not really talking about that bigger picture anyway.  The last three years have seen a shift in thinking about how everybody gets along with their fellow earthlings, with a soft focus on whether the Muslims can actually do this at all. The assassin did not help his cause in Europe by murdering Van Gogh if it is going to make Holland a place of major concern over the presence of Muslims.  I believe that this is a step beyond what you have described here, and more focussed than before...Surinam and Curacao probably never brought the threat of revolutionary terrorism home to Holland like this one does.

That's all for me - I'll keep listening.

The latest is he's not dead.

However, sources have confirmed Generalissimo Francisco Franco is still dead.

Good question.

The bushkultie just gets off on watching the tortures and murders, though, he's too cowardly to go fight, especially not for anything of real value.

That's why you want everyone else to have to pay for your sadomasochism, isn't it.

"This site was mentioned in a letter from three congressmen to the GAO urging an investigation..."

http://ustogether.org/Florida_Election.htm

The bushkultie's too stupefied/immoral to want wrongdoing to be investigated.

I know you're going to think I'm nuts, but I think I caught  3320.0 R.SonderGrense, from S. Africa tonight. At 00:48utc I tuned in  and the language at first seemed either Dutch or German, and indeed, it was being broadcast (according to ILG) in Afrikaan, so, I waited through the hour mark, but didn't recognize an ID, but their might have been one, there was quite a bit of fading. It is a 100,000 watt station, so who knows.
(I also think I may have briefly caught  2390.0  XEJN Huayacocotla from  MEXICO,  music, (sounded like an accordion, with the second song sounding "cajun" with fiddle) with very deep fade, almost not there, at 00:28-00:31utc and considering it is a 500 watt station, I sort of doubt it, but that was all that was listed at that time) I'm in so mo, using a very long random wire connected to a yb400pe, coax fed, and grounded.
And yes, I know, without an ID, this is darn impossible to figure out, but, considering what last night was like....

How many elections do you remember when every eligible voter voted?
If someone is an eligible voter and doesn't vote, that's their problem, assuming they aren't physically unable because of health or other extenuating problems to do so.

I'm sorry, Jean, but there is no North American radio station I am aware of on 1510kHz with call letters that even remotely like "WYRT".  I don't know what you were hearing.

Lucky son of a gun.

I have a friend who was deer hunting near Biwabik, and he says the same.  They were visible in the Twin Cities, but not spectacular.

I'll keep watching tonight, just the same.  The FM band has quieted down just a bit, as well - HF is dead as a doornail.  I can hear KYCR-1570 from Golden Valley just fine, as there is no competition on the same channel.

Remember (gleefully) counting a total of 120 for US/Canada, though my efforts were by no means exceptional. The strongest ones were from the east coast, but managed a few further west, including KMOX St.Louis (1120). Don't think I managed Minnesota, but may give the whole thing a try again this winter. Used to have an amplified loop with positive feedback. Was able to peak weak carriers right out in front of strong ones. Need to rebuild that loop again.

I don't know how much space you've got, Ian (I live in an apartment, myself), but I would highly recommend a large - aperture loop antenna. I have a couple of the NRC publications, and would be glad to share them with you. In my experience, most of the amplification schemes I've used introduced quite a bit of noise into the signal, so that was a setback.

I have that site bookmarked, and can only say that I am looking forward to my next trip back to Nebraska (In Spring, perhaps) to try my hand at using beverage antennas (as opposed to using beverages; that's another story and requires extensive refrigeration!).

> Looks like KFAN 1130 Minnesota might be a good one to go for!

You know, Ian, I've been cooking up a scheme, maybe getting on #SWL or another Instant Messaging program, and using that for communicating DX catches. Such a thing is also really useful for comparing "catches." I remember fondly chatting in ICQ with Alf Ardal, a DXer in Norway with a respectable beverage or two (or three), and verifying that he was, indeed, hearing 1620 from Omaha (another sports talk outlet). KFAN is actually a bit of a pest - I live about 3 miles from the transmitter site, and if you'd like, I can send some pics of the antenna system. It's located in a bog along the Minnesota River, East of Shakopee, Minnesota.

> Of course, you have the advantage of not having to stay up as late as I have, to get the trans-Atlantic DX. On the other hand, we get to enjoy the "great" climate here. Well, at least it doesn't go "30 below" like over there. That would bother even a hardened Scotsman.

Snow builds character.  Actually, I've camped in blizzards.  When I relate that story to my wife, she rolls her eyes and gives me "the look."

Let me know if you'd like a copy of my NRC books - I've used them as far as I can at present.

It is obvious that the fundamental flaw of democracy is that, in any society, stupid people outnumber smart people. It is clear from a glance at the electoral map that those areas possessing so much as the slightest glimmer of intellectual and cultural sophistication are all blue with the rest being all red.

Now you know why they call them "red" necks.

A veritable "Rednik" Rampage.

I think France is more concerned with how the US runs other countries.

If you believed Bush won legitimately, you'd welcome investigations into the validity of the election, certain that he'd be vindicated thereby.
Yet, instead, you're distraught that others are aware that the voting was rigged and are getting it checked out.  You reveal more than you know.

Yes, you're a fascist having a public tantrum because you wanted your fuhrer crook Bush to get away with election fraud, in your hate for the USA and for real Americans.

That's your best excuse for your posting 'style', after all.

If it weren't for your fuhrer Bush, you could get the healthcare you so-obviously need.

Get well if you can, and read about reality then.

There's no evidence the bushkultie ever managed to read this for comprehension in the first place, though.

He's not even permitted to consider it rationally.

You attempted to contrast Christians with Muslims and atheists.  However, it is not clear from what you write what that distinction may be.  Perhaps you could elaborate?

Oh come on RH, America is no longer practicing isolationism.
  And noone is making Americans feel guilty about loving America and being patriotic.  Who the hell are the "Liberal Elite" and "One Worlders" -- is this some mythological, idealogical creation of the paranoid Right?

We have been seeing some Sun action lately.

| NOAA Scales | Maximum in past 24-hours | Currently |
|---|---|---|
| Geomagnetic Storms | extreme | moderate |
| Solar Radiation Storms | moderate | minor |
| Radio Blackouts | minor | none |

I was just listening to New Zealand and they had a piece on DRM from 3:00 to 3:45 UTC where someone played received DRM from different points on the globe. It all sounded fine on AM if you know what I mean.

New Zealand sounded good on 17675 and also good on 15340 where they switched to at 4:00 UTC.

Been rereading Joe Carr's Receiving Antenna Handbook, and I was wondering if anyone has tried Joe's suggestion (well, Victor Misek's, originally) of using RG-174 in a Faraday shield version of the step down winding, and whether there was much of a difference in the result.

Ugh, conditions are nasty tonight.  Were it not for the solar conditions, I'd be checking my setup for problems.

I suspect (don't know, but suspect) that it's a 50 ohm input.  Either way, making a step down transformer will make a difference.  I've done one for the random wire I have running outside (based on the advice here), and it really does do the trick.  Try the following link and look at John Bryant's MS Word article:

http://www.dxing.info/equipment/

As for the other questions, I'll leave that to the others who have had more experimentation time to work with.

Elite intolerance of the type we've seen since the election for the mores of the "red county" voter doesn't rise to the level of persecution, so there's no need to try to exaggerate what I said for effect.  But if you aren't clued in to the mindset I'm talking about, you must not have spent much time on college campuses lately.  Or read the New York Times.  Or listened to your average Hollywood "celebrity."

A while back I had bidded on a Drake R8A. I had the high bid until the last 30 seconds when gottahaveit1995 nabbed it. Since then I have read about some shady tactics of RadioMart. Now I'm wondering if they/he were working together.

Did you check RadioMart's later auctions for a "like new" R8A?

> I'm thinking of dusting off my shortwave receiver and putting an antenna in my attic. I have about 29' of horisontal space to play with (in the most convenient direction, which runs more or less NE-SW, in Massachusetts), or about 40' if I want to put more work into it. Verically I have about 8', more in some places. I'm considering a T2FD antenna, as I expect to listen across a lot of bands and I don't have lots of space. Mostly I'm after BBC (which I guess is now a distance station, mutter), time signals, and whatever news broadcasts and music aren't All American All The Time. No real interest in DXing. No interest in transmitting.

Will 300 ohm TV wire soldered to an RCA jack work? Should I be looking at 75 or 50 ohm cable? (The 300 ohm TV cable has the advantage of being already in the wall).

The 300 ohm cable will work but 50 or 75 ohm coax would be better since the antenna impedance of a loop antenna, not bothering to make a proper T2FD is around the 50 to 100 ohms region. I don't know but expect the radio's input impedance to be around that also.

> 2. T2FDs apparently like to be tilted (hence the name) about 20-40 degrees. I'll be lucky to get a 15 degree angle in my attic, and less if I go out to 40'. How critical is the angle? What happens if the wires are basically horisontal?

I would not worry about the tilt. Tilting it will allow you to make it a little bigger in the same space but is not important. I would not bother with the resistor either, just make it a wire loop.

> 3. With 29' of space to use, what frequencies am I just not going to get?

The bigger the loop the lower the frequency it will work on. It is the length of the loop that counts. Lets say you can make it 10 ' high and 29 ' long.

78 ' = 29' + 29' +10' +10'

This would be resonant around 12 MHz so it would work well on on the 25 meter band and up. Probably OK on 31 meter band and then worse as you went lower.

The loop formula is length in feet (circumference) = 1005 / F MHz

If you need a lower frequency reception then you can use more than one turn. Separate the turns at least a few inches.

> 4. Am I better off with a 40' (total length of both wires) dipole

Depends on the receiver. The dipole will work but the loop will probably work better.

Well, you have a portable that can overload on strong signals and the loop will probably put out more signal than the dipole. You will most likely do OK with the 300 ohm twin lead to a dipole.

If noise becomes a problem the loop will be quieter.

For a one wavelength or more loop run the wire north / south for east / west reception.

I only post to Usenet and don't email replies. Good luck.

Fair enough.  My policy is the voters are always right.  In any case, how is the intollerance of some "liberals" any different than the intollerance of some "liberal-hating" conservatives?  And why label either one "elite"?

I suppose that's what he gets for giving you a measured response.

As much as I love apocalyptic visions, you should should consider that part of your message may get lost in overstatement.

You mean instead of the scientists you want him to listen to.

BTW, when we all "go down in flames," who will the evil corporations sell their stuff to?

Hallo,

Here is Jilly. Let.s do something with this crazy InfoRelation. By accident I have visited this web... and I am teriffied with what people wish to know and the money they offer! This service is designed for crazy scientists or maniacs... Like the one who uses nickname .OB. and who pays in absoulutely extravagant and suspicious way in my opinion.

It's deja vu all over again....

His body may have "assumed room temperature" as they say, but he will soon be very, very hot indeed.

Good riddance.

SM,

From what you have described, I would say there is no real advantage to using a T2FD in your Attic.

There are several Images of Attic Antennas in the "Shortwave Listeners (SWL) Antenna and AM/FM Antennas eGroup on YAHOO !

SWL Antenna's "Photo" Section "In-the-Attic" Antennas:
http://photos.groups.yahoo.com/group/Shortwave-SWL-Antenna/lst
*  Random Wire Antenna in the Attic (Flat)
*  Loop Antenna in the Attic (Flat)
*  Attic Conical Loop Antenna {More Wire... More Wire} (3D)
*  Snake In-the-Attic SWL Antenna {Very Simple One Piece}
*  Dual Windom SWL Antenna (3D)
*  Folded 203 Ft Random Wire MLB (3D)
*  Dual Attic Loop Antenna (T2FD?) or Figure Eight Loop (3D)
*  In-the-Attic Folded 'E' Loop Antenna or T2FD (3D)

NOTE:  Most of the Sangean AM/FM/Shortwave radios use a 1/8" Mono-Jack for the External Antenna Input.

KISAP:  I recommend using TV type Antenna Parts for most
"In-the-Attic" Antenna installations.

*  75 Ohm Coax Cable for the Feed-in-Line for Household 'man-made' Noise RFI/EMF Reduction.

*  TV 75 Ohm to 300 Ohm Matching Transformer (Balun) for Noise RFI/EMF Reduction and AM/MW Band Signal Reduction.

*  TV 300 Ohm Twin Lead for the Wire Antenna Element
50-100 Feet -or- 90 Feet of Insulated Hook-Up Wire.

*  "F" Jack to 1/8" Plug (1/8" Mono-Jack Adapter)
RadioShack Catalog # 278-257

Here are several Messages to Read about In-the-Attic Antennas:

I can confirm this. I know for a fact that "radiomart" is/was Martyn in Sadieville, KY. I'm not sure of the last name, but surely they're the same person.

I think that Ebay can be a good place for buyer and seller to connect if you take a few precautions.  For instance as a buyer I avoid sellers with less than 99% positive feedback and look for buyers with an established record.
As a seller I give more leeway in negative feedbacks before turning a buyer down.  I won't ship before payment has cleared.

SW reception is fairly non-existent this morn in Sactown as well. MW reception was fairly decent, though. Listened to San Diego's Mighty 1090, Sports XPRS, for Westwood 1's Monday Night Football coverage, as KNBR was airing Warriors-Mavs contest. Locked in like a local.

It makes sense to read the negative feedbacks a person gets - sometimes it's obvious the person who left it is a crackpot.  Sometimes it's less obvious, but the person leaving the neg has a bad reputation.

"I paid yesterday, where's my stuff?"

"Bum left me a Neg because I didn't pay"

Obviously negs related to fraud or deception are cause for concern.

MM,

About 1/3 of American Citizens (Voters) would 'identify themselves'
as "Practicing Christians" {Weekly Church Going Christians}.

About 1/3 of American Citizens (Voters) would 'identify themselves' as 'secular christians' as reflected by "Their" Personal Life History and the American Culture and Traditions "They" Observe.
{Attend Church at Christmas and Easter; and Get Baptized and Get Married in a Church.}

About 1/3 of American Citizens (Voters) would 'identify themselves' as something "Other". Such as: Jewish, Islamic, Buddhist, Hindu, or may be an Agnostic; or possibly an Atheist.

This Is WHY I Said: Most (Two-Thirds) would 'self-identified' themselves by their life experiences and family histories as 'basically' be Christians in their Beliefs.
[ As 'contrasted' to Islam and Atheism. ]

MM,

Mythological Idealogical Creation - NOT !
The whole Democrat Party of the USA is DOMMINATED by the Liberal Elite:  Who are COMMITTED to a One Worlder Vision.  Listen to the Democrat Party Candidates, they talk about the UN and what other Nations 'think'; forgetting that they are Americans First.

Paranoid Right - NOT !
Look at the posting in this NewsGroup all the 'Political Cadre' of Democrat Party of the USA are calling any American Citizen, who Voted for President George "W Bush a 'fascist'.

A REALITY CHECK OF THE FACTS:
The Democrat Party of the USA has gone from the Party of Class Warfare to become the Party of Hate Speech and Fear Mongering.

I still enjoy, and have also recently used, that line from Saturday Night Live.   Times like this make for rather interesting shortwave listening a well as the myriad of political impacts.  Anyone care to speculate how the Palestinians will tie it into an Israeli plot?

Thanks for getting me to clarify an important point. Only the first year of Gilligan can be properly placed in the Island Noir genre. I know it's hard to believe, but there are still some people who don't "get it". For them, I suggest they imagine some cast changes. Picture the Skipper and Gilligan played by Sidney Greenstreet and Peter Lorre. Mr. and Mrs. Howell played by Edward G. Robinson and Bette Davis. Ginger portrayed by Veronica Lake. Of course, the Professor would be Robert Mitchum.

With such a cast, the true nature of the island elite would have been obvious to even the most doltish, thick-headed viewer. Even some TV critics might have gotten beyond the question, "Howcum they brought so many cigarettes for a three hour tour?". But casting the castaways as comedic figures goes even beyond the brilliance of casting Fred MacMurray as Walter Neff. In this way, we get to see the other islanders as the trusting, innocent Mary Ann sees them. It's only as we mature, and listen to enough domestic shortwave radio, that the lies and moral corruption of Mary Ann's fellow islanders become apparent.

But those later color episodes in which people start showing up? Well, those episodes are just plain silly.

Frank Dresser

BBC Africa on 6005 after 0500 UTC is usually quite good, but not the last 2 days.  Australia has been not quite as good as usual for me, 6020 at 1200UTC is usual listening time.

Why would you post this? I see no relevant radio  content.
Who cares.
All you do is chase people away from the hobby, instead of encouraging them.
I find it interesting that, in a hobby that should promote a greater understanding between people around the world, all you want to do is cause more turmoil.
I have neither the time, nor the inclination to deal with you.

TIP#1: Grow up.
TIP#2: Get a life.
Tip#3: You're not really paranoid if everyone really does hate you.

Please excuse any ignorance I am going to show- you have helped me a lot as I learned to DX and what kind of radio gives the most bang for the buck.

What is the real deal with DRM? Are analog SW radios going away? Have any of you invested in a DRM capable receiver and how are they? Should I begin to move towards DRM and if so, what receivers will pick up and decode those signals? What are the limitations, or the cons if any, of DRM?

Thanks for any info/opinions you are willing to pass on...

I still enjoy, and have also recently used, that line from Saturday Night Live.   Times like this make for rather interesting shortwave listening a well as the myriad of political impacts.  Anyone care to speculate how the Palestinians will tie it into an Israeli plot?
I believe they already did. It was a question of poisoning.
